With a 1981 per capita gross national product of $340, Cape Verde is categorized by the World Bank as a low-income country. This is an understatement. The islands suffered 10 disastrous droughts between 1748 and 1948, each resulting in the death from famine of between 10 and 40 percent of the population. The lastest drought began in 1968 and is still going on. Although mass starvation has been averted by Western bilateral and multilateral food aid, population pressure on the less-arid islands has impelled many islanders over the years to migrate to a variety of destinations. Some 80,000 are in Angola—an incentive for Verdean diplomatic efforts to promote the kind of regional changes in southern Africa that might lead to an improvement in Angola's economic health. Others have made their way to Guinea-Bissau, São, Tomé and Principé, the United States (there are some 300,000 U.S. citizens of Verdean origin, most of them living in the New England states), and Portugal. Remittances from these emigrants and former nationals are an important source of foreign exchange for Cape Verde, reportedly covering about 40 percent of the trade deficit in 1979.

Although a third of Cape Verde's citizenry work in the agricultural sector, some 90 percent of the food consumed comes from abroad. In 1981, export earnings covered only 4.3 percent of import costs. Portugal is the main trading partner, followed by the Netherlands. International assistance amounted to $140 million between 1975 and 1980, but the government remains too impoverished to implement its plans for economic development infrastructure.

The most promising economic resource is Cape Verde's position on Atlantic sea and air routes. Although the international airport on Sal Island is under-utilized, it is a major source of employment and hard currency. A decision that was politically difficult but economically pragmatic was Cape Verde's agreement to allow South African Airways continued landing and refueling rights after independence. SAA accounts for some 90 percent of the airport's traffic, and the fact that Cape Verde is readily accessible to South Africans is surely one of the reasons for its slection as a meeting place for negotiations on southern Africa. In an interview published in the November-December 1983 issue of Africa Report, Pereira dealt straightforwardly with a question on why Cape Verde has continued to allow SAA to land:

"This is a problem that goes back to the beginning of our independence, because at that time decisions had already been made to boycott South African planes and ships. We analyzed the situation and found that we should not suspend the landing rights of South African planes. After independence, we realized that in our case it was very difficult to go ahead with sanctions, because we are islands and our communications with the exterior are very difficult. Therefore, we needed the airport. Because we didn't have financial resources to maintain the airport, it had to maintain itself by providing service. Just two planes—TAP of Portugal and South African Airways—utilized the airport at that time. We tried to attract other airlines, but this was not possible. Our choices were to boycott South African Airways and to have to close the airport, or to keep the airport open. Anyone in our situation would choose the second.

"We have had the opportunity to listen to our friends from the ANC [African National Congress], and they have understood our position. Therefore, within our government, we decided to continue to accept these planes, and it is something we have never hidden. We declared this publicly at the level of the OAU, in spite of their decision to boycott. An OAU mission visited us to verify the conditions under which we authorized South African planes to land, and a subsequent OAU decision incorporated the Cape Verde government's decision, meaning that the OAU found that in our specific case it is normal that we not boycott South African planes. Given this OAU decision, and the ANC's agreement, we feel that we have taken all interests into account."

On January 25, 1979, the government of Cape Verde hosted a secret meeting between representatives of the Angolan and South African governments. In the ensuing five years, President Pereira has made trips to most of the Front Line states of southern Africa and to Washington, and has hosted a range of key Front Line, South African, and American personalities and delegations. Special importance is attached to his role as an intermediary between the United States and Angola.

In addition to the reasons previously noted that have enabled Cape Verde to play a role in the distant southern African crisis (South African access to the Sal Island airport, Capt Verde's linguistic and cultural ties with the two lusophone Front Line states, and Pereira's zest for the role of mediator), there is a special political affinity between Cape Verde and Angola that goes back to the pre-independence relationship between Pereira and the late Agostinho Neto, Angola's first president. It was that relationship which made possible the initial 1979 Angolan-South African meeting. The large number of Americans of Verdean origin has also been a factor in the development of U.S.-Verdean diplomatic relationships in the years since independence.

Finally, the direct experience of the Verdean leadership with the waging and ultimate resolution of a liberation struggle has left them with a perspective oh the southern African situation that meashes with that of President Samora Machel of Mozambique. Quoting Machel in a recent interview with Jeune Afrique ("One chooses one's friends but not one's neighbors"), Pereira went on: "Neither Mozambique nor Angola will be able to liberate our brothers from a universally condemned regime . . . And the fact that the two countries are plunged into a state of permanent war is of no help at all . . ." President Pereira does not mask his concern that rejection of South African peace overtures by Mozambique and Angola would not help blacks within South Africa in any substantial way, and might actually make their situation worse by bringing into being a permanent confrontation like that between Israel and the Arab states—one which would give Pretoria an excuse to adopt a crisis-management posture that would involve increased repression of South Africa's blacks. There is concern as well that continued fighting would increase the risk of further superpower involvement.

Cape Verde also shares Machel's doubts that the necessary conditions for a classical guerrilla war of liberation yet exist in South Africa. In the absence of self-sustaining bases of political support within the Republic's borders, raids launched from outside South Africa can accomplish little enduring significance. Finally, a distinction is drawn between the struggle of the Portuguese colonies against foreign domination and the situation in South Africa, where the white population has no place to go and will have to be accommodated in whatever power-sharing arrangement ultimately emerges. For all of these reasons, the Verdeans have come to believe that an end to warfare in the region and an emphasis on peaceful struggle within the Republic is most likely to promote movement toward a more just South Africa.

While Verdean emissaries have travelled frequently and extensively during the last two years, it is not easy to pin down their precise movements. It does appear, however, that the third lusophone summit, held in the Verdean capital of Praia on September 21-22, 1982, served as a catalyst for the negotiations that took place between Angola and South Africa on Verdean soil later that year. Some of the other dates to mark down:

On November 10 and 23, 1982, U.S. Vice-President George Bush stopped off at Praia at the start and end of a two-week tour of Africa. At both of these meetings the possibility of a summit between Angolan and South African officials was discussed.

On December 7, 1982, Angolans and South Africans met in Cape Verde for the first time since 1979. The Angolan delegation was led by Minister of Interior Manuel Alexandre Rodrigues (Kito) and the South African delegation by Foreign Minister Roelof ("Pik") Botha and General Magnus A. de M. Malan, minister of defense. The two sides reportedly did not go far beyond airing their respective positions, and some of the debate may have centered on the question of South African support for the UNITA guerrillas in Angola; if the Cubans were to withdraw from Angola, what guarantee would Angola's MPLA regime have that Pretoria would not continue to back UNITA?

The prospects for a second high-level meeting faded as a consequence of a step-up in South African military activity against SWAPO bases in Angola shortly after the December 1982 talks, but a low-level follow-up meeting took place in Cape Verde on February 23, 1983.

The second half of 1983 was marked by another round of intense diplomacy. Pereira visited Mozambique in early September, where President Machel publicly praised him for his role in facilitating talks between Angola and South Africa. In early October, Pereira left for what had originally been announced as a private visit to the United States but turned out to be a fairly high-profile event that included a meeting with President Reagan.

The next key development was the December 18-20, 1983 lusophone summit in Bissau. Participants in the preparations for the meeting have confirmed that it was significant in several ways: the five governments agreed to back fully any negotiations and agreements by Angola and Mozambique with South Africa (by this point Machel had clearly decided on the road to Nkomati); they agreed to proceed in tandem; and, according to several sources, they also began outlining a "revision in the strategy" with regard to dealings with South Africa.

Since the Bissau meeting, the lusophone states have taken a lead role in the effort to build a consensus among OAU members. On April 27-28, a lusophone summit in Maputo reinforced the support for the peace moves. It was followed by an April 29 Front Line summit in Arusha, Tanzania, which reaffirmed its participants' "total and unqualified commitment to the liberation struggles" in South Africa and Namibia, but made no promise of further practical support to the ANC and SWAPO, other than catering for refugees.●

NATIONAL HOSIERY WEEK

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the week of August 12-18 marks the 14th annual observance of National Hosiery Week. I am proud to pay tribute once again to this important industry, which has played such a vital role in our free enterprise system.

In many communities, hosiery manufacturers are major employers. They provide jobs and produce revenue for operating State and local governments. More than anything, though, they provide good quality of life for the people in the communities where they are located, and quality products.

Mr. President, the average hosiery company is a small- or medium-sized business. Most are family owned, and located in small towns and cities throughout the country. Yet they employ 65,000 workers in 415 plants and have total retail sales of more than $6 billion.

Mr. President, this week is especially significant to me because more hosiery mills are located in North Carolina than in any other State. I am very proud of that. Incidentally, the average hosiery mill produces 9 million pairs a year and employs 158 workers.

During National Hosiery Week, retailers across the country will join the celebration as stores display all types of hosiery for the entire family. Mr. President, the hosiery industry is a good example of how well the free enterprise system works, and what it means to the people of this country.

North Carolina is proud of its distinctive leadership in the hosiery industry, and we are grateful for the fine quality of life this industry has provided for so many people.

On behalf of my fellow North Carolinians, I extend my sincere thanks and congratulations to the hosiery industry for the outstanding job it is doing for the people of our State and Nation.●

FLOW OF SUBSIDIZED PRODUCTS INTO THE UNITED STATES

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, one of the least emphasized issues facing this Nation is our response to the flow of subsidized products into our country. As a nation, we have a very casual attitude toward free trade. Today's modern vocabulary speaks not just of free trade but of fair free trade.

Fair free trade is a bit like apple pie, motherhood, and the American flag. However, when it comes to enforcing fair free trade, our actions have simply not met our rhetoric. One of the industries most affected by subsidized products is our steel industry.

Having a viable steel industry is not only important to my State of Indiana, but it is important to our Nation and its national security as well. Over the past years, I have worked with the steel industry—both management and labor—to obtain more productivity, capital investment, and modernization of our steel mills. The 1981 Economic Recovery Tax Act was most helpful in this respect, providing the long-needed incentives to modernize. Although great strides have been made, and our steel industry is more productive, efficient, and modernized today than it was 5 years ago, there still looms before us the problem of subsidized steel being dumped into this country.

I have always maintained that the most effective way to deal with nations dumping steel, or any other product, is through direct, reciprocal actions. As a matter of policy, we should vigorously prohibit subsidized steel or other subsidized products from entering our borders.

There are basically three ways to counter steel imports. First, we could have current trade laws vigorously enforced. Our antidumping laws could be enforced through tariffs and countervailing duties. We could further promote fair free trade through strict adherence to the GATT agreement.

Second, we could achieve voluntary arrangements and agreements with particular countries that are dumping products into this Nation. We have, for example, a voluntary steel agreement with Europe that was executed in 1982. Thus far, I believe it has worked.

Finally, we can impose quotas as a means of retaliation. I have been in steadfast agreement with the steel industry representatives that quotas should be our last resort, but, unfortunately, we are now at that point of last resort. The trade laws have not been enforced. We do not have any import-restricting agreements with such violators as Brazil, Argentina, and Korea. We have no alternative but to insist on quotas for our remedy.

I am, therefore, cosponsoring the Fair Trade in Steel Act of 1984, S. 2380. As a strong proponent and friend of the steel industry, I feel we have simply run out of alternatives.

As every Senator should know, the U.S. steel industry is in trouble. Prices for steel products, according to industry data, have dropped since 1981 because of the unfair trade facing the industry. The industry has lost over $4.5 billion during the last 2 years alone. Steel imports have risen precipitously. Capturing an average of 9.3 percent of the U.S. market during the 1960's, imports rose to a level of 15.3 percent in the 1970's. They then swelled to 20.5 percent of the domestic market in 1983, and they surged to 26 percent this past January and February. This has resulted in a sharp drop in employment in the steel industry, from a level of 570,000 during the peak production year of 1979 to only 346,000 in 1983. Employment in Indiana has dropped from an annual average of just over 68,000 in 1979 to 49,700 in 1983.

We also know the steel industry is presently undergoing an extensive modernization process. This modernization effort is absolutely essential if the steel industry is to survive. During this modernization process, however, the industry is being forced to face increasing imports of steel from foreign producers, much of this steel being subsidized by the foreign producers' governments.

We simply cannot ignore this practice which takes unfair advantage of our economic principles and which places our steel industry at a disadvantage. This basic unfairness was recognized by the International Trade Commission [ITC] on June 12, 1984, when it ruled—in response to a section 201 petition under the 1974 Trade Act—that the U.S. steel industry was indeed being injured by these steel imports. The ITC's recommended solution, however, is simply not adequate to address the very real, very urgent, and very unfair problems which face this industry.

I hope my cosponsorship of the Fair Trade in Steel Act of 1984 will serve as a strong signal to President Reagan that he should go beyond the ITC recommendations and call for limitations on the full range of subsidized steel imports. A subsidy by another name is simply unfair trade. Decisive and quick action is needed to achieve an effective solution to this painful situation.

While the focus of this bill, and of the ITC's recommendations, is on the grievous effect that subsidized steel imports are having on the U.S. steel industry, we must not forget that this is only one side of the coin. I support taking this decisive action against the importation of subsidized steel into the United States while the domestic steel industry is modernizing with the clear understanding that the industry must uphold its part of the bargain.

My support of the Fair Trade in Steel Act presumes the commitment by steel industry management and labor to significant increases in modernization investment by the industry and the continuation of the worker/management partnership of recent years that has resulted in very promising and encouraging increases in productivity and efficiency. The continuation of this partnership and productivity trend is essential to the industry's future health and competitive ability.

I believe that the President and the Congress have a responsibility to assist industries that are targets of unfair trade practices. However, in taking up S. 2380 or similar legislation, Congress must not be seen as heralding a new age of protectionism. We all must realize that protectionism does not and will not address the root cause of the problem. Fair free trade is still clearly the best way to make use of our resources and distribute the world's wealth. In cosponsoring S. 2380, I am not advocating adoption of a new national policy, but joining in an act of self-defense—a measure of last resort in indicating to the President and the world that we need action and need action now.

In conclusion, I firmly feel that action must be taken to allow the steel industry the time and the financial means to undertake the essential and badly needed modernization. The American people cannot begrudge the steel industry the chance to do this. This industry must use this respite to continue to work to become more competitive, or the efforts and sacrifices will be in vain. Finally, and as a further step in this effort, I believe we in Congress and those in industry must call upon the appropriate committees of jurisdiction to look at our trade laws to see why these laws have so clearly failed to function as intended.●

TRIBUTE TO NEW JERSEY POW'S AND MIA'S

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, over 10 years ago this Nation witnessed the final withdrawal of American ground troops from Southeast Asia. For most families this was a time of joy and reunion. For 27 families in New Jersey, and thousands of others nationwide, it was a painful reminder that their sons had not yet come home. The families of our POW's and MIA's have worked tirelessly to locate these men. Their courage, sacrifice, and dedication has been an inspiration to all of us. We must make their cause our cause.

Americans disagreed on U.S. participation in the Vietnam war. However, despite these differences, all Americans speak in one voice in demanding that the governments of Southeast Asia account for our POW's and MIA's. We cannot rest in our efforts until we are completely satisfied that this has been done.

In the last 10 years the families of the POW's and MIA's have been the conscience of the Nation on this issue. They deserve our heartfelt thanks and support. On August 6, Senator BRADLEY and I, along with our colleagues in the New Jersey congressional delegation, will be honoring these families at a ceremony in Clifton, NJ. They will be presented with commemorative medals issued by Congress in recognition of their courage and dedication.

I ask that the names of New Jersey POW's and MIA's appear in the RECORD following my remarks. These men served courageously when their Nation called, and they and their families should be honored today.

ENTERPRISE ZONES: TIME FOR THE FEDS TO BOLSTER STATE SUCCESS

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, while Congress has procrastinated on President Reagan's enterprise zone initiative to revitalize distressed areas, the States have moved boldly ahead and made great strides in targeted tax and regulatory relief to stimulate economic growth. While State enterprise zone programs vary considerably in their scope and the specific types of relief they offer, they share the goal of spurring development by removing artificial barriers imposed by government and drawing on the latent resources of the community and its people to spark renewal.

As the Wall Street Journal reported on July 31, "while the issue is debated in Washington, State-established enterprise zones are slowly breathing new life into distressed inner cities and small towns across the country. These islands of tax and regulatory advantage have sprung up in 16 of the 23 States enacting enterprise-zone legislation since 1981." States and localities are making enterprise zones work. But many of the States are proceeding in the expectation that Federal legislation will be passed, and that is where we have fallen down. Federal incentives will give enterprise zones the kind of boost that can give the inner cities and depressed rural areas their best chance in years to regenerate themselves.

Mr. President, the important thing about enterprise zones is that the plan uses simple incentives to bring to bear the full resources of the neighborhood, of the business community, of civic organizations, and of the people themselves to bring about economic renewal. The Senate has now passed Federal enterprise zone legislation twice, and the House has balked at giving the program a chance. This is a matter that transcends partisanship, and now that we are ready to try again on enterprise zones, I hope that the vital experiments now going on in the States will convince Members that now is the time to act.

Mr. President, I ask that the Wall Street Journal article of July 31 on State enterprise zones be included in the RECORD at this point.

The article follows:

STATES EXPAND ENTERPRISE ZONES DESPITE LACK OF FEDERAL INCENTIVES

(By Joann S. Lublin)

Despite President Reagan's renewed efforts, there seems to be little chance that Congress will enact his plan this year for federally supported business-enterprise zones.

But many states aren't waiting for Washington to act: Even without federal incentives, hundreds of communities are offering tax breaks to businesses to help revive depressed areas.

As one of his six legislative goals for the remainder of the year, the president wants Congress to enact his three-year-old plan for enterprise zones. But Mr. Reagan is facing an apparently immovable obstacle in the form of Democratic Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who criticizes the Reagan proposal as a needless giveaway to business. The Treasury Department estimates the program would cost the government $3.4 billion in lost revenue in its first five years.

ISLANDS OF ADVANTAGE

Mr. Rostenkowski's opposition alone is probably enough to block the bill's passage, and the president is expected to respond in campaign speeches by rebuking Congress for its inaction. But while the issue is debated in Washington, state-established enterprise zones are slowly breathing new life into distressed inner cities and small towns across the country. These islands of tax and regulatory advantage have sprung up in 16 of the 23 states enacting enterprise-zone laws since 1981.

By year-end, businesses will have invested or committed nearly $2 billion in more than 300 communities' zones, generating or retaining about 60,000 jobs, estimates the Sabre Foundation, a nonprofit Washington think tank.

"I think the success has been more than you would have expected, especially when you consider the states don't have a lot to offer in the way of tax incentives," says Stuart Butler, a British economist who is a leading advocate of the zones.

Indeed, most states set up their program to take advantage of Mr. Reagan's proposal. The administration's plan would designate 75 zones over three years. Businesses operating in those zones would be exempted from all capital-gains taxes and 75% of corporate income taxes, and their employees would receive individual income-tax credits.

State and local tax breaks, however, are only about 20% as lucrative as the proposed federal tax advantages, the Sabre Foundation says. Thus, large companies have been reluctant to enter the zones. "What's in place are some goodies, but not enough," says Melvin Taylor, who is building an ice cream-making plant in a Baltimore enterprise zone.

But the lack of federal action isn't likely to cool states' enthusiasm for the programs. Five additional states are considering authorizing enterprise zones, and at least two are likely to pass bills soon. "Some of them are doing it because . . . otherwise they're at a competitive disadvantage" with states already promoting such programs, says Richard Cowden, who edits a newsletter on enterprise zones for the Sabre Foundation.

The amount of business investment in an enterprise zone often depends on the generosity of the tax incentives offered. Connecticut's breaks, for example, include temporary property-tax abatement, certain salestax exemptions, income-tax reductions and job-training reimbursement. Since fall 1982, businesses have invested or committed about $97 million to the state's six zones, mainly for commercial projects. About 6,000 jobs have been created or retained.

"We are flabbergasted at how much difference they (the incentives) have made in revitalizing areas," says Carol Gaetjen, manager of Connecticut's enterprise-zone program. In New London's zone, for instance, a $20 million office park is going up on 25 acres of waterfront land left vacant by slum clearance eight years ago. The acreage "was something sitting there waiting to happen, and the zone was the trigger," Mrs. Gaetjen says.

Tax savings for businesses in enterprise zones can be substantial. SFE Technologies of San Fernando, Calif., last month opened a $9.5 million, 100,000 square-foot electronics parts plant in a New Orleans zone. The expected saving of nearly $200,000 just from reduced sales taxes on equipment and construction materials influenced the choice of the location, a company official says.

By contrast, the major lure of Florida's enterprise-zone legislation—a credit on the state's already low corporate income taxes—is less appealing. "It's just not that toothy right now," concedes Tim Nugent, director of a redevelopment agency in Tampa's Tybor City, a historic, former cigar-making district that became an enterprise zone years ago.

Many city officials often find they must package tax incentives with regulatory favors and other inducements to persuade companies to expand, remodel or set up operations in the rundown areas. Among the extra aids: streamlined or "one-stop" shopping for building and other permits, public works improvements such as lighting and sewer repairs, and low-cost loans to small businesses.

Such packaging made a difference for Spiegel Inc., the Illinois mail-order catalog concern. It considered a Sun Belt relocation of an obsolete mail-center complex in Back of the Yards, a depressed Chicago manufacturing area that is now an enterprise zone. Instead, Spiegel will spend $20 million to modernize the 1,900 employee complex. The city's relaxation of certain building code requirements, along with state tax breaks and retraining aid, persuaded Spiegel to stay in Chicago, according to the company.

Some localities are also making extra efforts to alter the public view of an enterprise-zone neighborhood as a blighted slum, beset by crime and declining property values. They increase police patrols or enlist community groups and local merchants in neighborhood cleanup campaigns. The Illinois law allows city-owned commercial property to be "shopsteaded"; a city can donate a building to a community group for activities such as a child-care center.

POOR IMAGE OFTEN PERSISTS

Nevertheless, a depressed area's poor image often persists even after revitalization begins. Physical improvements take time, and changing the community's perception takes even longer, says Gregory Dunn, project manager for the South Norwalk, Conn. enterprise zone.

The proliferation of new, small concerns in many enterprise zones presents another problem. Such companies tend to employ few workers or demand highly technical skills that local residents may lack. "Unfortunately, what (the zone) needs are some very labor-intensive businesses," says William Regan, who runs Teaching Computer Systems Inc., a five-person concern, in the Baltimore zone. He brought his staff with him when he moved from Columbia, Md., and doesn't expect to employ more than a few others.

The richer array of tax incentives offered by the pending federal legislation might attract a better mix of small and big businesses to enterprise zones. Mr. Taylor who is building the ice cream plant in Baltimore, says he expects eventually to employ 300 people, and reap more than $1.5 million in property and corporate income-tax breaks over three years. Yet a federal enterprise-zone program, Mr. Taylor insists, could "change the whole complexion of investment in this country.●

WILLIAM R. HOWARD LEADS PIEDMONT AIRLINES

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, yesterday William R. Howard, president and chief executive officer of Piedmont Airlines, addressed the luncheon meeting of the Washington Aero Club. Bill Howard is a remarkable citizen. Under his dynamic leadership, Piedmont Airlines has met the challenge of deregulation. For example, Mr. President, according to figures released earlier this week, Piedmont Airlines recorded during the second quarter of 1984 the largest operating profit in its 36-year history.

Bill Howard is an outstanding executive and a fine man. He has a great deal to say worth listening to regarding the state of the aviation industry today, and in particular about how Piedmont Airlines has prospered following deregulation.

I ask that the text of Mr. Howard's speech before the Washington Aero Club on July 31, 1984 be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The material follows:

ADDRESS OF WILLIAM R. HOWARD, PRESIDENT AND CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER, PIEDMONT AIRLINES

Although from time to time I have had the privilege of attending a number of Aero Club meetings, this is my first opportunity to appear before you. I am honored at the opportunity to discuss our company with you, the membership of the oldest and most prestigious aviation club in the U.S.

During the next few minutes I am going to try to explain, by word and picture, where Piedmont has been, where it is, and where it is headed, under deregulation.

As I am sure some of you are aware, since deregulation Piedmont has, percentagewise, been the fastest growing of the conventional airlines. That growth has been based on strategies that have been somewhat unconventional—and yet have been reasonably successful. Let me show you what I mean by unconventional.

Before I do so, however, I should tell you that at 11:30 this morning, here at a press conference in this building, we announced service to two new cities. Effective November 1 Piedmont will commence service with three daily round trips between Evansville, Indiana and our Dayton hub, and on that same day we will commence service with two round trips between Rochester, NY, and our Baltimore hub. In both cases those cities receive a wide range of connecting service to major eastern and southern cities—providing them with far better air transportation than they have ever before experienced. With us at the press conference was Congressman Frank Horton representing Rochester, and Congressman Francis X. McCloskey, Congressman from Evansville, and Evansville's Mayor Michael Vandeveer. We very much appreciate the time these gentlemen have taken to participate in these announcements this morning. I assure you gentlemen, we'll do our very best to make you pleased and proud of the service we will be providing to Evansville and to Rochester.

As many of you will recall, in October of 1978 when Congress deregulated the airline industry, the most common airline reaction was that deregulation would offer some marvelous opportunities for airlines to at last get into some "greener pastures" where other carriers were making profits. For example, one of the east/west transcontinental carriers jumped in the New York-Florida market and one of the east coast to Florida carriers jumped into the transcontinental market. Both thought they saw opportunities to seize a share of the other's lucrative market. Since that time both of those carriers have backed out of those markets. That reaction to deregulation has been repeated many times across the country and in one case, at least, the attempt to get into too many new major routes, resulted in at least the temporary demise of that Texas carrier.

As I have said, Piedmont has been among the fastest growing of any of the carriers since deregulation. We have added Boston and Pittsburgh and Philadelphia and Miami, Tampa, Orlando and Memphis, New Orleans and Dallas, Houston and Denver, and the list goes on. In each case those are major U.S. cities.

The significant difference between what we have done, and what most others have done—and not everyone seems to recognize the difference—is that in virtually every case, Piedmont's new routes are between a new large city and a much smaller city where no nonstop service had previously been provided. In most cases that new service was provided in a market so small that many doubted that it would work. For example, when we started our first hub at Charlotte, we inaugurated Charlotte-Boston, Charlotte-Miami, and Charlotte-Dallas service. In each case those were regarded as marginal opportunities that probably could not work. We were betting however that between our use of smaller jet aircraft (737's) with two engines and two pilots, and the self-feed that we would provide at those new hubs, that we would make them work.

They did work, and as a result, people in a city like Fayetteville, for example, have daily round-trip commuter service to 26 important markets through our hub in Charlotte. Although a few airline critics have suggested that the hub is for the benefit of the airline and not the passengers—try telling that to the people of Fayetteville or any of a dozen similar cities in the Carolinas or Michigan or Ohio or more recently New York or Rhode Island or Connecticut. Try telling them that their new Piedmont hub with well-timed service to and from a medium sized hub is not a real asset.

As we completed the major work on our first hub at Charlotte, we began to work on a blueprint to create a wholly "new Charlotte," a new hub which would provide better service to a whole handful of cities than had previously been possible. In July of 1982 we opened a new hub at Dayton, which will provide Evansville, for example, with the opportunity to go to Boston or New York or Washington among others, and return home the same day. The Dayton hub became profitable almost from the start, and we provided the quality of transportation that has never before been enjoyed by Dayton or by the Ohio and Michigan and Indiana cities that it feeds.

Then in July of 1983 we opened a new similar hub in Baltimore. Try telling the people in Providence, or Hartford, or Albany, for example, that a hub of this kind does not provide far more service than any possible combination of linear routes would do—and here is the service opportunities that Congressman Horton's city of Rochester will get from two daily round trips to Baltimore, and here are the service opportunities Mayor Vandeveer's Evansville will get from their round trips to Dayton.

Please, Admiral Engen, don't tell those that live in the Fayettevilles or the Grand Rapids or the Akron/Cantons or the Providences or any of the other 40 feed cities that Piedmont serves that this service through three new hubs has not been an advancement in air transportation for the benefit of the air traveling public. We have not only convenienced travelers by providing service between big cities and medium cities not heretofore possible, but we have spread that traffic across the country, away from the major hubs to the smaller hubs. From an ATC standpoint that spreading should have been a relief. Most of the traffic that used to flow from the Carolinas to Boston flowed over New York, and most of the traffic that used to flow from our area to Florida flowed over Atlanta, as did the traffic to Dallas/Ft. Worth and Houston. Some of the peaking that occurred at those major hubs has unquestionably been pulled away from them and moved to more manageable airports. Thus the new smaller hubs should aid, not hinder the ATC efforts.

Undeniably, the results for Piedmont have been good. Passenger growth, revenue passenger miles, revenues, operating profit, net profit are in good shape. I should mention that both the operating profit and the net profit for the first half of 1984 are very nearly the same as they were for the total year of 1983. We will have a good 1984.

What about our service to the greater metropolitan Washington area? I wonder if you knew that Piedmont provides the most scheduled service to the area with over 80 jet departures a day today, and 91 by November 1st. And if you want to include the commuter flights associated with those airlines, the comparison is even more dramatic. Shortly after we announced the new Baltimore hub, we also announced the purchase of Henson Airlines which had 59 departures a day at Baltimore/Washington International itself, with the result that we have far more service at BWI, and more service covering the Baltimore/Washington area than any other carrier. It's clear that with our growth plans at Baltimore, that edge will only be enhanced.

During that period Piedmont's stockholders equity—and our equity per share—have all improved impressively—and perhaps most important of all, even in light of Piedmont's rapid growth, when we more than tripled our jet aircraft fleet, our debt/equity ratio has improved each year, and we expect further improvement in 1984.

On November 1st of this year we will add some impressive new services—these will include the Rochester and Evansville service I mentioned, and a round trip between Charlotte and San Francisco and a round trip between Dayton and San Francisco; daily round trips between Baltimore-Dayton; Dayton-Denver; and Baltimore-Columbia.

And in spite of it all I haven't really told you the thing of which I am most proud. I am most proud of our passenger complaint to compliment ratio. Almost one-to-one—one complaint to one written compliment—and our CAB complaint record is about as good as any in the industry.

Obviously, we at Piedmont are pleased and proud of our progress, but certainly not everything is going well. During the last 18 months the frequency of our ATC delays has increased more than 50%, and the length of the average ATC delay has doubled during that same time period—and that's not the worst of it. The worst of it is that most of those increases are generally during periods of good weather. Our passengers tend to understand ATC delays in bad weather, but they tend to disbelieve you when the sun is shining.

Earlier in this talk I grumbled about Admiral Engen's occasional reference to hubs as being the source of ATC delays. In fairness, however, I want to tell you that I honestly think that our new FAA Administrator, Admiral Engen, is an able man who has undertaken a difficult task, and will make progress with it. He is convinced that he is getting at the roots of the problem, and I expect to see some results—but it won't come a minute too soon. Passengers are being inconvenienced, millions of gallons of jet fuel are being wasted and tempers are running short. Airline passengers, through billions of dollars in passenger taxes, have paid for a truly first rate ATC system. The money is available, the technology exists, and the need in indisputable. We need now to get on with the job—on a high priority basis.

Thank you so very much for this opportunity to chat with you this afternoon.●

IN SUPPORT OF WORLD FOOD DAY

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise this afternoon to join as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 332, legislation proclaiming October 16, as "World Food Day." The purpose of this legislation is to increase the awareness of the American public to the serious problems of world hunger.

Mr. President, as many as half a billion people around the world still suffer from hunger and malnutrition. These numbers are simply unacceptable. Many of these people inhabit the newly developing countries of the world. Many of these mostly African countries are plagued by recurring natural catastrophes and inadequate food production. Their problems are in dire need of international attention. Crises like the African drought and the accompanying starvation may be expected to arise again, requiring a widespread humanitarian response from the world's greatest food producers, of which we are the leader.

We are very lucky in the United States; we have been blessed with agricultural abundance and it is in the traditional American spirit of generosity that we provide assistance to less fortunate countries through programs such as the Food-for-Peace Program—Public Law 480. Through cooperation with private organizations, business, and other developing nations, we must continue in our efforts to ease the pain and suffering caused by hunger.

This World Food Day resolution is part of a continuing effort to generate an understanding of the world's food problem. World Food Day, October 16, will be dedicated to exploring ways in which our Nation can further contribute to the elimination of hunger in the world.

I heartily encourage the prompt adoption of Senate Joint Resolution 332.●

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have consulted with the minority leader and the clearance process on our side. I now make the following unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m. tomorrow. I further ask unanimous consent that after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order there be a special order in favor of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] of not to exceed 15 minutes, to be followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business until 12 noon, with statements therein limited to not more than 5 minutes each.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the vote on the cloture motion under the provisions of rule XXII be changed until the hour of 3 p.m. and that the mandatory quorum under the provisions of that rule be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, that is the end of the request.

May I explain that in this sequence, if the order is granted, at 12 noon we would be back on the motion, under the provisions of the Budget Act, to waive section 303 of that act in order to proceed to the agriculture appropriations bill. We would stay on that until the hour of 3 p.m. At 3 p.m., under the order, if it is granted, we would have the vote on cloture without the preliminary quorum call. If cloture is invoked, Mr. President, we would remain on the nomination until it is completed. If cloture is not invoked, we would resume consideration of the motion if it had not been previously disposed of.

That is my interpretation of the request. Could I inquire of the Chair if it concurs in that interpretation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be correct.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this request meets with the feelings of our people on this side of the aisle. I just wanted to make sure it was clearly understood that there would be no debate on the nomination or on cloture prior to 3 o'clock. In other words, those 3 hours would be used between 12 and 3 on the motion by the distinguished majority leader to provide the waiver in connection with the agriculture appropriation bill. So I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair, I thank the minority leader, and I thank all Senators who have considered this matter in the clearance process.

Mr. President, I have a few things that are cleared for action by unanimous consent on this side. If the minority leader is prepared to do it, I am prepared to go through my file and see how far we can go.

Mr. President, first, I would propose to call up H.R. 5890, which is at the desk, if the minority leader has no objection.

Mr. BYRD. No objection.

COMMISSION RELATING TO MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., HOLIDAY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate H.R. 5890 not at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

31-059 O-87-9 (Pt. 16)

A bill (H.R. 5890) to establish a commission to assist in the first observance of Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3589

(Purpose: To establish a commission to assist in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr.)

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS], I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAKER], for Mr. MATHIAS, proposes an amendment numbered 3589.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Congress finds that—

(1) January 20, 1986, marks the first observance of the Federal legal holiday, established by Public Law 98-144, honoring the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr.;

(2) such holiday should serve as a time for Americans to reflect on the principles of racial equality and nonviolent social change espoused by Martin Luther King, Jr.; and

(3) it is appropriate for the Federal Government to coordinate efforts with Americans of diverse backgrounds and with private organizations in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr.

SEC. 2. There is established a commission to be known as the Martin Luther King, Jr. Federal Holiday Commission (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Commission").

SEC. 3. The purposes of the Commission are—

(1) to encourage appropriate ceremonies and activities throughout the United States relating to the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr., which occurs on January 20, 1986; and

(2) to provide advice and assistance to Federal, State, and local governments and to private organizations with respect to the observance of such holiday.

SEC. 4. (a) The commission shall be composed of—

(1) four officers from the executive branch, appointed by the President;

(2) four Members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives in consultation with the minority leaders of the House of Representatives;

(3) four Senators, appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate in consultation with the majority and minority leaders of the Senate;

(4) Coretta Scott King and two other members of the family surviving Martin Luther King, Jr., appointed by such family;

(5) two individuals representing the Martin Luther King, Jr., Center for Non-Violent Social Change (a not-for-profit organization incorporated in the State of Georgia), appointed by such organization; and

(6) fourteen individuals other than officers or employees of the United States or Members of Congress, appointed by the members of the Commission under paragraphs (1) through (5) of this subsection from among individuals representing diverse interest groups, including individuals representing labor, business, civil rights, and religious groups, and entertainers.

(b) Not more than half of the members of the Commission appointed under each of paragraphs (2), (3), (5), and (6) of subsection (a) shall be of the same political party.

(c) Members shall be appointed for the life of the Commission. Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

(d) Members of the Commission shall serve without pay, but may, subject to section 7, be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission.

SEC. 5. (a) The Commission shall first meet within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act. At this first meeting the Commission shall elect a chairperson from among its members and shall meet thereafter at the call of the chairperson.

(b) The Commission may encourage the participation of, and accept, use, and dispose of donations of money, property, and personal services from, individuals and public and private organizations to assist the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities under this Act.

(c) The provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the Commission established under this Act.

SEC. 6. (a) The Commission may appoint a director and a staff of not more than five persons, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service. Subject to section 7, the Commission shall set the rates of pay for the director and staff, except that the director may not be paid at a rate in excess of the maximum rate of pay payable for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, and no staff member may be paid at a rate in excess of the maximum rate of pay for grade GS-13 of such General Schedule.

(b)(1) Upon the request of the Commission, the head of any department or agency of the United States may detail, on a nonreimbursable basis, any of the personnel of such department or agency to the Commission to assist it in carrying out its responsibilities under this Act.

(2) Each head of such department or agency is authorized to cooperate with and assist the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities under this Act.

SEC. 7. All expenditures of the Commission shall be made from donated funds.

SEC. 8. Not later than April 20, 1986, the Commission shall submit a report to the President and the Congress concerning its activities under this Act.

SEC. 9. The Commission shall cease to exist after submitting its report under section 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3589) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 5890) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I now say to the minority leader that I have cleared on this side two items on today's Calendar of Business, and that is Calendar Order Nos. 1074 and 1076. I wonder if the minority leader can clear either or both of those matters.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am happy to respond in the affirmative.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

REDUCTION OF EMIGRATION FROM THE SOVIET UNION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Calendar Order No. 1074.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 279) expressing the sense of the Congress regarding the reduction of emigration from the Soviet Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

(The parts intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets and the parts intended to be inserted are shown in italic.)

H.J. RES. 279

Whereas the number of Jews allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union [has] decreased from fifty-one thousand in 1979 to [two thousand] about thirteen hundred last year, a drop of over 95 per centum;

Whereas the Soviet Union signed the Helsinki accords on August 1, 1975, which bound them to allow [the free emigration of ethnic nationals;] freedom of movement, including emigration;

Whereas the Soviet Union has grossly violated that agreement by refusing emigration to Soviet Jews and by harassing, intimidating, and punishing those Soviet Jews who apply for exit visas under the provisions of the accords;

Whereas the Soviet Union has [banned] systematically interfered with the practice of The Hebrew language and culture and severely restricted Jewish religious expression;

Whereas the Soviets have made it almost impossible for Soviet Jews to [seek] obtain higher education and meaningful employment inside the Soviet Union;

Whereas the Soviet Union uses mental hospitals and abuses of psychiatric [torture] treatment to punish dissenters and refuseniks; and

Whereas the Soviets have violated the United [Nation's] Nations' Declaration of Human Rights, to which they are a party, by refusing free emigration for Soviet Jews and others: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should [insist on] urge Soviet compliance with the Helsinki accords and the United Nations' Declaration of Human Rights at [the current CSCE Review Conference and] the General Assembly of the United Nations and at all other appropriate international meetings, especially as these documents relate to the emigration of Soviet [Jews] Jews, as a sign of Soviet good will in other negotiations.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The amendments to the preamble were agreed to.

The preamble, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

COMMUNITY PLANNING ASSISTANCE TO INDIAN TRIBES

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, next I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Calendar Order No. 1076, H.R. 4952.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4952) to authorize the Secretary of Defense to provide assistance to certain Indian tribes for expenses incurred for community impact planning activities relating to the planned deployment of the MX missile system in Nevada and Utah in the same manner that State and local governments were provided assistance for such expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 4952) was ordered to a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 453 ORDERED HELD AT DESK

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate receives from the House, House Joint Resolution 453, the National High Tech Week resolution, that it be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALENDAR ITEMS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have a list of matters that are cleared to be indefinitely postponed on this side. If the minority leader would permit me to do so, I would like to read that list now, and see if he objects to any of them. I may say in advance that what I propose to do is make one unanimous-consent request that that action be taken as to those which are cleared on both sides.

The measures involved, Mr. President, and cleared for indefinite postponement on this side are as follows: Calendar Order 141, S. 1280; 142, S. 1281; 143, S. 1282; 144, S. 1283; 177, S. 1288; 178, S. 1289; 179, S. 1290; 181, S. 1292; 206, S. 662; 240, Senate Joint Resolution 86; 505, H.R. 4139; 537, S. 2062; 657, S. 1059; 799, H.R. 5394; and 1058, S. 2853.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection.

Mr. BAKER. I make that request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, that is all I have in today's folder. If any other Senator seeks time, I am prepared to yield the floor. I see no Senator now seeking recognition.

Therefore, I move in accordance with the order previously entered that the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 11 o'clock a.m. on tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 6:01 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Thursday, August 2, 1984, at 11 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 1, 1984:

THE JUDICIARY

Paul M. Bator, of Massachusetts, to be U.S. circuit judge for the District of Columbia circuit, vice, a new position created by Public Law 98-353, approved July 10, 1984.

Juan R. Torruella del Valle, of Puerto Rico, to be U.S. circuit judge for the first circuit, vice a new position created by Public Law 98-353, approved July 10, 1984.

Emory M. Sneeden, of South Carolina, to be U.S. circuit judge for the fourth circuit, vice, a new position created by Public Law 98-353, approved July 10, 1984.

Frank H. Easterbrook, of Illinois, to be U.S. circuit judge for the seventh circuit, vice, a new position created by Public Law 98-353, approved July 10, 1984.

Cynthia Holcomb Hall, of California, to be U.S. circuit judge for the ninth circuit, vice, a new position created by Public Law 98-353, approved July 10, 1984.

Charles E. Wiggins, of Virginia, to be U.S. circuit judge for the ninth circuit, vice, a new position created by Public Law 98-353, approved July 10, 1984.

Thomas J. Aquilino, Jr., of New York, to be a judge of the U.S. Court of International Trade, vice Frederick Landis, retired.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, August 1, 1984

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Creator, in our service to You help us to reach out and include, rather than exclude. Help us to open doors so there are no outsiders, for it is in serving Your people that we truly serve You. Our love for You, O God, whom we cannot see, will be judged by how we love those whom we can see. Whatever we do to the least of Your people, we do to You. Guide us in all we do so that we may see a more just and peaceful world. This we ask in Your name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule 1, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a joint resolution and a concurrent resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.J. Res. 577. Joint resolution designating August 1984 as "Polish American Heritage Month"; and

H. Con. Res. 342. Concurrent resolution relative to adjournment to a date certain during the remainder of the 98th Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 268) "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain hydroelectric powerplants at various existing water projects, and for other purposes."

NATION'S GOVERNORS OFFER THEIR OWN BALANCED FEDERAL BUDGET PLAN

(Mr. DONNELLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, a distinguished group of this Nation's Governors have announced their intention to propose their own balanced Federal budget.

We welcome any serious effort to identify possible budget savings and to prepare the American public for the uncomfortable choices that we will have to make to reduce our deficit.

If the Governors' effort is going to be a constructive venture, it will have to be more than just an exercise in rhetoric.

They will have to look into their own State budgets for places to make economies. They must not assume that the budget can be balanced while their own favorite programs, such as revenue sharing, industrial development bonds, and farm price supports, and so forth, remain untouchable.

We look forward to hearing from the Governors, and hope that they will help lead the way to the kind of austerity and self-sacrifice that is essential if the Federal deficit is to be brought under control.

WARSAW UPRISING

(Mr. SIKORSKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, August holds great historical significance for Poland and those in the fight for justice and freedom. Today marks the 9-year anniversary of the Helsinki accords on human rights, largely ignored by the Soviet Union.

Forty years ago today, the freedom fighters of the Polish underground, the home army, began a struggle to free Warsaw from Nazi forces. During the entire battle Soviet forces camped across the Vistula, refusing to aid the Poles, and after 63 days the heroic home army was destroyed and Warsaw was demolished by the Nazis with the aid of the Communists.

On August 31, 4 years ago, the Solidarity Union entered into an agreement with the Polish Government recognizing once again the spirit of free Poland, but just weeks later the Soviet-dictated government imposed martial law and crushed this movement for freedom and democracy. As one dissident said: "On that night, it was not I who was arrested, it was freedom. It is not I who am a prisoner today, it is Poland."

Today I pray that the administration recognizes this as it considers loosening its sanctions.

ADMINISTRATION HARMFUL TO THE POOR

(Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, a week or so ago in his Presidential news conference, President Reagan indicated that there "was not one single fact or figure," in his words, to substantiate the charge that his administration has been harmful on the poor. Well, I have done some checking. Under the Reagan administration, 1,500,000 Americans have been excluded from our efforts to help Aid to Families With Dependent Children.

Under the Reagan administration, because of his budget cuts, 3,900,000 children no longer receive a school lunch. If the President is elected for another term, his budget indicates that he wants to cut $5.7 billion from America's medicaid program, which goes only to the poor.

This President simply does not understand how his budget is harmful to the poor, or as a high school senior in Montana said to me 2 weeks ago, "Congressman, this President is out of it."

SHE'S A BIG SPENDER

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, last week it was reported in the national press that GERALDINE FERRARO, Democratic candidate for the Vice Presidency, attacked President Reagan as no friend of the poor and calling herself a fiscal conservative.

She went on to hit the President hard on the Federal deficit stating, "The current economic recovery is fueled by those deficits. It's a national shopping binge paid from money borrowed from the Federal Government."

It's interesting to note the facts, as recorded by the National Taxpayers Union [NTU]. Mrs. FERRARO's rating with that watchdog agency was 18 percent in 1982, and 16 percent in 1983, making her voting for big spending over 80 percent of the time. She is a big spender. NTU's year-end figures from 1982 reflected the worst 25 percent of those voting for high spending—all were Democrats. Including the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee GERALDINE FERRARO.

AN ALARMING ELECTION-YEAR POLITICAL MOVE

(Mr. PICKLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, since the President's announcement last week that he would seek a cost-of-living increase for Social Security beneficiaries, there has been a growing outcry from citizens, the press, and public officials.

They condemn this action for what it is: An alarming election-year political move.

The American people are wise enough to realize that the President and many in both national parties are simply tinkering with Social Security in an attempt to gain votes in November.

We created the Social Security cost-of-living law in 1972 to take Social Security out of election year-politics. Now, President Reagan is thrusting it back into politics.

The House should not hastily rubberstamp the Senate's bill to enact the President's proposal. We should examine it carefully and thoroughly, and decide if this is the responsible thing to do. If we pass this legislation, it should be because it is sound public policy—not merely because it is good electioneering.

TIM DAGGETT AND THE OLYMPIC GOLD

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, even though I'm not his coach, his proud parent, or even his neighbor from West Springfield, MA, I am Timmy Daggett's Congressman, and my heart leapt like every other American's last evening when he cinched his team's gold medal, punching down to a perfect landing for a perfect "10" in the high bar competition.

This "can do" men's gymnastic team, only hoping for a bronze to put our country on the map in this competition, did the impossible last evening at the Pauley Pavilion in Los Angeles. In a sport completely dependent on individual performance, this group of young American men worked as a team—each one taking pride in the others' performances and humbly but proudly accepting the golds for the United States.

I know I speak for Tim Daggett's friends and neighbors in western Massachusetts as well as for all his countrymen in saluting him and his teammates Widmar, Gaylord, Conner, Hartung, and Johnson. After years of sacrifice, practice, and determination, they have reached the pinnacle of success in this rigorous but beautiful sport. I thank them for sharing with us their dedication and instilling in us a deep sense of national pride.

JOEL W. "JAY" SOLOMON

(Mrs. LLOYD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I rise with regret to inform the House of the untimely death of Joel W. "Jay" Solomon. Jay Solomon, to those of us privileged to know him, and to have had the opportunity to work with him in his endeavors, was both a fine community and business leader. Many of my colleagues in the House know him better as the Administrator of the General Services Administration from May 1977 to April 1979. During his tenure he spearheaded investigations into Government corruption, leading to 41 indictments and the conviction of 27 Government employees and contractors on fraud charges. His honesty, his integrity, and his desire to serve his country as effectively as possible was evident during his term as the GSA Administrator.

Mr. Speaker, Jay was a good personal friend and I will always feel honored to have known him. He was always there to lend a helping hand to his community and his country and the contribution he made to his community of Chattanooga, TN, is enormous. He was an outstanding businessman and built his own business, the Jay Solomon Development Corp., up to national prominence. In recognition of his achievements and the work he did for his fellow man, the Federal building in Chattanooga, which houses my own district office, was renamed the Jay Solomon Federal Office Building. He is survived by his wife, Peggy, and his two children, Joel and Linda.

SYNFUELS FUNDING CUT

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the House will consider a $10 billion cut in the synthetic fuels agency. This morning I would like to discuss with my colleagues the five worst arguments for the $10 billion cut.

The first argument is that a $10 billion cut will not affect pending applications before Synfuels; in fact, Synfuels today has authority for $8.6 billion in new applications. To cut $10 billion is to not leave 1 cent for new applications and, in fact, require SFC to cancel existing commitments.

The second argument is that after the $10 billion cut, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation will still have sufficient resources for research and development. This argument has been made repeatedly on the floor by those in favor of the $10 billion cut. Let us make it clear: Synfuels does not have the legal authority to spend one penny on R&D, and to suggest that it can is to really obfuscate the arguments before the House.

The third argument is that the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has funded a sufficient number and type of projects to prove that it is not feasible. In fact, the SFC has not funded one project in the Midwest or East involving our coal resources, although several pending applications are now at the agency.

The fourth argument is that a $10 billion cut will not discourage development of the synfuels industry; but, of course, that is not true. It would destroy credibility in the program and no corporation would be willing to invest in it in the future.

The fifth and final argument is that we no longer need a synfuels program in the United States. Today we still import one-third of our petroleum, the same percentage as at the time of the Arab oil embargo.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the $10 billion Conte-Wolpe cut, and vote "yes" on the $5 billion Ratchford-McDade cut.

MONDALE CITES MASSIVE DEFICITS

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I see in the morning paper that Mr. Mondale gave a speech yesterday in Cleveland in which he said massive deficits as far as the eye can see are undermining hopes of economic growth and black participation in the American dream.

Nothing could be better said or more eloquently stated. The only problem is, for a leader of the Democratic Party to complain about deficits is kind of like the young man who killed both of his parents and then, when he was brought to trial, he threw himself on the mercy of the court because he was an orphan.

Mr. Speaker, we have Discharge Petition No. 10 right here at the desk whereby we can bring the balanced budget amendment to the Federal Constitution to a vote. I would ask you in your leisure moments this morning to sign that discharge petition so that we in the House can have a vote on the issue so the people of this country can determine who truly is interested in bringing runaway Federal spending under control. You control the House. We cannot bring it to a vote until you say so. My request to you, sir: Let us have the vote.

THE MONDALE-CARTER YEARS OF DOUBLE-DIGIT INFLATION

(Mr. BILIRAKIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, let's go back 4 years in time. Remember when the Mondale-Carter team left office in 1980? Remember the 2 back-to-back years of double-digit inflation? I am sure the American people have not forgotten.

I am also sure that the American people will not forget that Ronald Reagan has brought inflation under control. In 1983, the Consumer Price Index fell to 3.8 percent—less than a third of what it was under Mondale-Carter. The average American has more money that goes further because of the drop in inflation. Confidence in the economy is soaring as consumer spending, after being adjusted for the low inflation, has skyrocketed by 10 percent—the largest quarterly increase in two decades. The American people will remember the Mondale-Carter administration was the administration of runaway inflation.

INTERNATIONAL PARLIAMENTARY GROUP [IPG] FOCUSES ON SOVIET HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the location and condition of Andrei Sakharov remains unsubstantiated despite Soviet assurances. There is evidence that he is confined in a mental hospital in the city of Gorky and being treated with mind-altering drugs.

The Washington Post has taken editorial leadership in repeatedly devoting its lead editorial to the circumstances of Dr. Sakharov and the symbol that he represents to the world of Soviet repression of human rights.

Mr. Speaker, peoples throughout the world cannot understand why the Soviets continue to build detractors by cruelly persecuting their own people who are critical of their policies. If a system of government cannot tolerate criticism, it is obviously a system that ultimately will fail.

Perhaps enlightenment and an understanding of history will eventually catch up with the Soviet leadership. Until they do, pressure for change must come from outside.

One important effort to pressure for change is the newly formed International Parliamentary Group for Human Rights in the Soviet Union. It is a group of 400 parliamentarians from 13 free-world countries, all committed to fighting human rights abuses in the Soviet Union. I urge my colleagues to join.

MISERY INDEX AT 11-YEAR LOW

(Mr. HUNTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, when President Reagan took office, many of this Nation's economic gurus predicted disaster on every front. Now, nearly 4 years later, they continue to speak of doomsday. Yet they ignore one of the most telling of our economic indicators, the misery index. Mr. Speaker, the misery index is at an 11-year low and promises to decline further.

The index, based on the sum of the unemployment rate and the 12-month change in the Consumer Price Index fell to 11.3 percent, its lowest level since the preoil embargo days of July 1973.

These soothsayers would have us elect to office a man who helped drive this index to an alltime high of 21.9 percent in June of 1980. Let's leave aside all the economic and political rhetoric and deal with the facts. The Reagan plan for economic recovery is working.

NATIONAL HIGH-TECH WEEK

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 453) designating the week of September 30 through October 6, 1984, as "National High-Tech Week," and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 453

Whereas the economy of this Nation is closely tied to technological advances;

Whereas the United States has long been a leader in high technology development;

Whereas it is of the highest national interest to focus our collective abilities to maintain this leadership;

Whereas the national commitment to high technology development has been called into doubt;

Whereas the youth of the Nation need to have educational opportunities to grow and develop in a high technology environment; and

Whereas our youth should have a national focus on their high technology future: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of September 30 through October 6, 1984, is designated as "National High-Tech Week". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities, including programs aimed at educating the Nation's youth about high technology.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HALL] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYMALLY. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from California, for yielding.

The minority has no objection to this joint resolution being taken up at this time.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 453 will provide a week at the beginning of the school year when teachers and parents will have the opportunity to focus the attention of students on the impact of high technology on their lives and careers. The main purpose of the week is educational.

The high-technology revolution will have such profound effects on the lives of all children that they cannot afford not to become prepared for changes it will cause.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for support of House Joint Resolution 453, and I wish to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] and the Chair of the Subcommittee on Census and Population, the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HALL], for their support of this measure.

Mr. Speaker, the children of this country are being carried, perhaps unconsciously on their part, into a world where computers and the high technology that makes them possible, defines the possibilities and the limits of their experience. Jobs will be centered about computers just as some kinds of jobs will be lost because of computers and the robotics which they control. Our children spend their time, their money, and their leisure on activities made possible by computers. It is incumbent on us as parents, teachers, corporate and political leaders to see that our children are well enough informed about the world into which they are being thrust so that when their time comes, they will know how to live comfortably, prosperously, and happily in that world. That is why I am proud to announce that within a few minutes the House of Representatives will pass House Joint Resolution 453 which will set aside the week of September 30 to October 6, 1984, as "National High Tech Week"—a week which will give parents and teachers a time in which to focus their attention and that of their children and students on the implications of the high technology revolution for their lives and careers.

We have chosen to symbolize the passage of this bill by sharing the podium with a robot. We have chosen this kind of symbol because I think it illustrates the kinds of options that are being offered our children. In our youth, this robot, which is being developed as a toy was not available at any price—not for industry and certainly not as a toy. Today a child can program this robot to speak, to play games, even to go across the room to get the software to plug into the child's video game machine. Children who learn to use this robot will have given themselves their first lesson in how to operate the sophisticated industrial robots that will make their cars, process their food, and protect them from hazardous materials in the future. I have chosen this symbol to demonstrate the need to teach our children to use wisely the high technology toys, tools, and machines that will play such an important part in defining the quality of their lives.

I would like to point out to everyone that a commemorative bill such as that for High Tech Week must have a majority of Members of Congress as cosponsors in order to assure passage. While my staff worked hard to gain the necessary cosponsors, I wish to commend Robert Haavind, the editor of High Technology magazine for making us aware of the usefulness of such a commemorative week through an article published in this magazine. Once we introduced the bill, Mr. Haavind was also very generous in helping us to explain to the various Members of Congress what an educational opportunity would be provided by High Tech Week. I am delighted that all of our work has resulted in passage of the bill. I believe this week provides an ideal focus for efforts to educate our children and the general public about the implications of the high tech revolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 6028, and to include extraneous matter, along with tables and charts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION ACT, 1985

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6028) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to not to exceed 2 hours, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and requests the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] to assume the chair temporarily.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 6028, with Mr. DE LA GARZA (chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] will be recognized for 1 hour and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at this time we present for the approval of the House the fiscal year 1985 appropriation bill for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies.

It is an honor for me to serve on this subcommittee, Mr. Chairman, with my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE]. The gentleman from Massachusetts, as the Members know, is not only the ranking minority member on this subcommittee but he is the ranking minority member on the full Committee on Appropriations and is one of the able Members of the House. It is a distinct honor for me to serve with all of the members of this subcommittee, Mr. Chairman. These are all able Members of the House.

We consumed about 14 weeks in hearings on this bill. When we had the bill before the subcommittee, we heard testimony from several hundred witnesses from the executive branch and from outside groups, as well as Members of Congress. We have an excellent staff on our subcommittee, the same as we do on all the other subcommittees, Mr. Chairman, of the Committee on Appropriations.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, could actually be called the people's bill. It is the bill that contains the money for job training, the Job Corps, protection of pension funds, summer youth employment, the dislocated worker assistance program, worker safety and health, and Federal unemployment benefits and allowances. It contains money for training, job search, and relocation allowances under the Trade Act for the unemployed. It is the bill, Mr. Chairman, that contains the money for most Federal assistance for health and education.

Further, it is the bill, Mr. Chairman, that contains the money for veterans' employment services and biomedical research under the direction of the National Institutes of Health.

In this bill we have the money for alcohol, and drug abuse, and mental health programs and for medicaid. The social services block grant and the community services block grant are in this bill, along with money for compensatory education and education for the handicapped.

The bill, Mr. Chairman, further provides the money for vocational and adult education and higher and continuing education, money for library services and for ACTION volunteer programs, and money for the Offices of Civil Rights.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, on our subcommittee we believe that this bill could be called "the people's bill."

In this bill we recommend the sum of $6,124,701,000 for the Department of Labor. For the Department of Health and Human Services we recommend $72,043,305,000.

For the Department of Education we recommend the sum of $17,191,262,000.

For related agencies we recommend the sum of $788,177,000. The grand total of the departments and related agencies is $96,147,445,000.

The sum of $70,932,370,000 is mandatory. That means Mr. Chairman, it is fixed by law. Nothing as far as our committee is concerned can be changed. A total of $25,215,075,000 is discretionary money.

We deferred action, Mr. Chairman, on budget estimates of $7,196,306,000 for programs that are not authorized. We have held back the sum of $7,913,213,000 of our section 302 funding allowance under the House budget resolution for these programs after they are authorized: This is the 1984 level for these programs.

Seventy-four percent of the total appropriations in the bill is for entitlement programs. For discretionary programs, Mr. Chairman, in which spending is controlled throught the annual appropriation bill, the bill includes the figure that I just gave of $25,215,075,000, which is an increase of $3,539,181,000 over the budget but a decrease of $421,733,000 below the amount appropriated for these programs for fiscal year 1984. assuming that we eventually fund the deferred items at the 1984 level, we have $1,712,000 remaining in our section 302 funding allocation under the 1985 House budget resolution.

After 14 weeks of hearings, with hundreds of witnesses, as I pointed out, Mr. Chairman, in marking up this bill we decided to place the major increase in those parts of the bill that mean so much to the people. For job training programs, we recommend $1,886,151,000 for the period July 1, 1985, to June 30, 1986. For summer youth employment, we recommend $824,549,000 for the summer of 1986. This will provide a level of 818,000 jobs.

Those two programs that I have just mentioned, as the Members know, are forward funded programs.

For dislocated workers, there is $222.5 million for 1985. For the Job Corps, there is $600 million to provide for 40,500 enrollees.

For the Trade Act, there is $26 million.

For OSHA, Mr. Chairman, we recommend in this bill $219,652,000.

For the National Institutes of Health, we recommend $4,834,343,000.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out one fact in this particular part of the presentation of the bill. When my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. SILVIO CONTE, the ranking minority member on this subcommittee and the ranking minority member on the full committee, and I were elected members of this committee, we had $75 million, as the gentleman remembers, for the National Institutes of Health. Think about it, Mr. Chairman. It was $75 million about 30 years ago, and now we are up to $4,834,000,000.

This is money that is well expended. It pertains to cancer, heart and stroke, and all of the biomedical research that means so much to our people. This is an increase of $505,325,000 over the budget request and $598,975,000 over fiscal year 1984.

For the National Cancer Institute, the bill that we recommend to the House contains $1,084,950,000, an increase of $73,034,000 over the budget and $92,293,000 over fiscal year 1984.

We have 6,200 new and competing research grants in the bill, instead of 5,000 requested in the budget and 5,272 as we have for fiscal year 1984. This is where the money is well expended. It goes to the universities medical schools, dental schools, and colleges throughout this country and the research facilities where biomedical research is conducted on all of the dread diseases.

We have $405,318,000 for alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health programs; there is $362,300,000 for the community services block grant.

For education, Mr. Chairman, we recommend $3,680,000,000 for chapter 1 grants for education of disadvantaged children; $1,298,540,000 for education for the handicapped; $1,215,400,000 for rehabilitation services; $5,079,000,000 for student financial assistance, including $3,753,000,000 for the Pell grant program.

We bring this program, Mr. Chairman, from a maximum grant of $1,900 to $2,100. We recommend that to this House.

We have $831,314,000 for vocational and adult education, the same amount as 1984 and the full amount authorized.

We have $50,000,000 for title VII for higher education facilities at the universities and colleges that they must compete for, Mr. Chairman. For the first time in a number of years, we recommend $50,000,000 in title VII of the Higher Education Act.

Library services were left completely out of the President's budget. We put it back in and recommend to you and to the House, Mr. Chairman, $86,880,000.

For the ACTION Agency, we recommend $147,722,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FUQUA). The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill. This is the best bill that the Appropriations Committee has marked up for labor, health, and education since I have been a member.

At this time I would like to point out one other matter. The distinguished gentleman that sits in the chair, the chairman of the Committee of the Whole today, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA] who presides over this bill, has presided over this bill on a number of occasions. He is one of the best presiding officers in the House and it is a distinct honor and a privilege for us to present this bill when the gentleman from Florida is in the chair, and I say to the distinguished gentleman, we appreciate the fact that he presides each time this bill is presented.

Mr. Chairman, it is a good bill. We recommend it to the House. I have a more detailed statement on the bill which I would like to insert in the RECORD at this point:

TOTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION PROGRAMS

H.R. 6028 as reported includes $96,147,445,000 in new budget authority for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and Related Agencies.

Seventy-four percent of these funds, $70,932,370,000, is for entitlement programs in which funding levels are determined by the basic authorizing laws. The Committee recommendation for these entitlements is, in net, $169,224,000 more than recommended by the President but $1,327,336,000 less than appropriated for these programs in fiscal year 1984. This reduction is due principally to decreases in Federal support for State unemployment assistance.

The bill includes $25,215,075,000 for discretionary programs in which spending is controlled through the annual appropriation bill. This is $3,539,181,000 over the amount recommended by the President but $421,733,000 less than appropriated for discretionary activities in fiscal year 1984. The year to year comparisons are distorted by the fact that the Congress provided $2.9 billion in fiscal year 1984 to forward fund employment assistance programs under the Job Training Partnership Act. If these funds are excluded from the comparison, the bill provides an increase of $2,481,677,000 over 1984 for discretionary programs.

H.R. 6028 does not include funding for a series of activities for which authorizations have not yet been extended for 1985. These include some of the most important and most popular activities under our jurisdiction including Headstart, Refugees, Health Block Grants, Impact Aid, Nurse Training, etc. Consideration of Budget estimates totalling $7,196 million has been deferred for these programs. In fiscal year 1984 these activities received $7,913 million. Funding for these programs will be considered as soon as possible after the enactment of new authorizations.

In addition to the amounts included in the bill, very large sums are automatically appropriated each year for labor, health and human services and education programs under permanent law. The principal items in this category are the social security, unemployment compensation and railroad retirement trust funds. In the aggregate total budget authority for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services and Education and Related Agencies would increase to $382,477,611,000 in fiscal year 1985. This is $27,458,523,000 (7%) above the 1984 level. After consideration of the unauthorized programs is completed it is expected that total spending will exceed $390 billion.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The bill provides a total for the Department of Labor of $6,124,701,000, including $4,907,301,000 for discretionary programs and $1,217,400,000 for entitlements. The bill exceeds the President's budget request by $299,530,000, all in discretionary programs, but it is below the 1984 appropriation by $9,631,147,000. The reduction from 1984 is accounted for by the fact that no 1985 appropriations are needed for advances to the Unemployment Trust Fund (the 1984 amount was $7.1 billion) and that the 1984 bill included a one-time transition appropriation of $2.9 billion for the Job Training Partnership Act.

We recommend $3,823,079,000 for programs under the Job Training Partnership Act for 1985, an increase of $212,455,000 over the President's budget. Most of the increase, $200,000,000, is for summer youth employment. In this bill we included $824,549,000 for the summer of 1986 and we provide an additional $100,000,000 for the summer of 1985 to bring it up to a total of $824,549,000. The regular appropriation for the summer of 1985 was included in the 1984 appropriations bill. For the Job Corps we provide $600,000,000 to maintain the current program level of 40,500 trainees.

The bill includes $26,000,000 for training and job search activities under the Trade Act. This is the same as last year. The President requested no funds for this.

For the State Employment Service we provide $740,398,000 for State allotments. This is the same as last year and the same as the budget request. The Committee recommends $35,000,000 to administer the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit, $15,000,000 more than last year. This program will continue to be financed by general revenue. We don't believe the Trust Fund should be used for this program. The bill includes $1,580,600,000 for State administration of the unemployment insurance system. The Committee reduced the request for contingency funds because of lower official unemployment rate estimates.

The Committee provided 50 additional Wage and Hour investigators, primarily for the Special Targeted Enforcement Program. This program is aimed at those industries that tend to employ illegal aliens.

We provided an additional $1,900,000 for OSHA State programs so that OSHA can continue to fund the New York State plan that was initially approved in 1984.

The bill includes $6,540,000 to enable the Bureau of Labor Statistics to implement the report on plant closings and mass layoffs. This report should provide much useful data to the Congress and the Executive Branch.

We approved seven new positions for the Inspector General to be used in the Office of Organized Crime.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

The bill which we present today includes $72,043,305,000 for programs administered by the Department of Health and Human Services. This includes $10,568,609,000 in advance appropriations for fiscal year 1986 for the public assistance entitlements—principally Medicaid, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Supplemental Security Income and Black Lung Benefits. The total recommended for the Department is $1,036,828,000 above the level requested by the President and $5,379,480,000 above the 1984 level. The bill does not include funding for numerous Health and Human Services programs for which the President's budget requested $6,272,376,000. These programs were not authorized at the time of mark-up of the bill. Funding for these programs, including such popular activities as Headstart, Low Income Energy Assistance, elderly feeding programs, Health Block Grants, research training and health professions assistance, will be considered as soon as possible after the enactment of authorizing legislation. Two entire accounts, the Human Development Services appropriation and the Health Resources and Services appropriation have been deferred in their entirety because of authorization problems.

There is no department or agency of the Federal government more important to the American people than the Department of Health and Human Services. Its activities form the heart of the so-called "safety net" system which provides for our neediest and most vulnerable citizens. More than 40 million Americans benefit directly from these programs either through direct financial help or through support services such as community health centers, crippled children's services and elderly feeding programs. In addition to these safety net programs, this department manages those programs which protect the health of our people through systems of biomedical research, disease control and health promotion. The amounts recommended continue this country's long standing commitment to these purposes. While there are substantial increases in this bill for the Department of Health and Human Services, we believe strongly that these are justified and that they deserve the support of this House.

DISCRETIONARY ACTIVITIES

Of the $72 billion included in the bill for the Department of Health and Human Services, $6,603,929,000 is for discretionary programs in which spending levels are determined through the annual appropriation process. The amount included in the bill for these discretionary programs is $603,813,000 above the comparable level allocated to these programs in 1984. This is an increase of approximately 10 percent. The level recommended by the Committee is $1,196,665,000 above the President's budget.

The increases over the budget recommended by the Committee are intended to accomplish a number of key objectives. First, the Committee has restored numerous programs to the 1984 level which the President's budget proposed to eliminate. Examples of these items include the Community Services Block Grant (+$354 million), the Work Incentives program (+$267 million), mental health clinical training (+$21 million), service demonstration projects for the chronically mentally ill (+$9 million) and child welfare research (+$10 million). Second the Committee bill includes substantial increases to take advantage of unprecedented opportunities in the biomedical research programs at the National Institutes of Health and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration. The bill includes $5,142 million for biomedical research. This is an increase of $635 million—14 percent—over 1984. Third, the bill includes a number of smaller program increases for very high priority areas such as infectious disease programs at the Centers for Disease Control, nursing home safety inspections, and Medicare claims processing contract costs.

NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH

The sixteen appropriations include in the bill for the National Institutes of Health, in the aggregate, amount to $4,834,343,000. This is an increase of $505,325,000 over the budget estimates and $598,976,000 over the comparable fiscal year 1984 appropriations. Within the total, the major appropriations are: $1,084,950,000 for the National Cancer Institute, an increase of $73,034,000 over the 1985 budget estimate, and $97,293,000 over the comparable appropriation for 1984; $764,135,000 for the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute, an increase of $73,282,000 over the budget estimate and $89,477,000 over the 1984 appropriation; $515,516,000 for the National Institute of Arthritis, Diabetes, and Digestive and Kidney Diseases, an increase of $59,127,000 over the budget request and $72,984,000 over the comparable appropriation for 1984; $412,987,000 for the National Institute of General Medical Sciences, an increase of $37,580,000 over the budget request and $46,153,000 over the comparable appropriation for 1984; $379,520,000 for the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke, an increase of $44,431,000 over the budget request, and $54,026,000 over the 1984 appropriation; $355,728,000 for the National Institute of Allergy and infectious Diseases, an increase of $39,039,000 over the budget request, and $50,057,000 over the 1984 appropriation; $303,531,000 for the Division of Research Resources, an increase of $58,558,000 over the budget request, and $61,608,000 over the 1984 appropriations; $296,929,000 for the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, an increase of $26,582,000 over the budget request, and $31,921,000 over the 1984 appropriation; $189,437,000 for the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, an increase of $11,604,000 over the budget request, and $16,441,000 over the 1984 appropriation; $171,097,000 for the National Eye Institute, an increase of $16,765,000 over the budget request, and $20,318,000 over the 1984 appropriation; $140,102,000 for the National Institute on Aging, an increase of $25,781,000 over the budget request, and $27,805,000 over the appropriation for 1984; and $95,826,000 for the National Institute of Dental Research, an increase of $8,612,000 over the budget request, and $11,516,000 over the 1984 appropriation. These are the 12 major research institutes and divisions. In addition, a total of $124,585,000 is included for the John E. Fogarty International Center for Advanced Study in the Health Sciences, the National Library of Medicine, the Office of the Director, and for Buildings and Facilities.

The Committee has deferred consideration of 1985 budget requests totalling $237,435,000 for unauthorized programs, including research training, medical library assistance, and cancer control and construction activities.

The Committee continues to place top priority on the support of basic biomedical research through the mechanism of the investigator-initiated research project grant.

The NIH is the largest source of support for biomedical research conducted in the universities, medical schools, dental schools, and research institutions of this Nation. For the past 35 years, the support of investigator-initiated research grants has been the principal mechanism of distributing funds provided for NIH-supported research. The Committee believes that the support of these projects must be sustained and enhanced so that the current momentum of scientific discovery is preserved and future health gains are assured. In recent years, while the number of new and competing grants has stabilized at approximately 5,000, the award rates and paylines for these grants have declined and many excellent investigators have not received funding. The Committee, therefore, has increased the funding for NIH by $151,474,000 to support an estimated 6,200 new and competing research project grants. In distributing this amount among the individual institutes the Committee has followed the recommendations of the NIH Director which will raise both award rates and paylines for most of the institutes above the levels projected in the budget request.

Last year the Committee restored funds in the 1984 budget to support approximately 99 percent of direct costs for noncompeting projects and 96 percent of costs for competing projects. At these levels NIH was able to fund its grants at levels that prevailed in the years prior to the austerities of the 1982 and 1983 budgets. The 1985 request again proposes significant downward negotiations from study section recommendations and committed amounts. The Committee believes that these arbitrary reductions from full costs-beyond the discretionary adjustments considered appropriate by the awarding Institute threaten the very scope of the research being conducted. The Committee has added $106,072,000 over the request so that NIH may continue to support research project grants at levels more consistent with the historical policy that the Committee advocated in 1984 appropriations. With these additional funds noncompeting awards would be supported at about 99 percent of commitments and new and competing awards would be supported at about 97 percent of estimated study section recommendations.

NIH estimates that the bill will support a total of 18,294 research projects. This compares with 17,094 which would be supported by the 1985 budget request, 17,202 supported in 1984, and 16,921 supported in 1983. The total of 6,200 competing grants supported by the amounts in the bill by the 1985 budget request, 5,272 supported in 1984, and 5,389 supported in 1983.

It is generally recognized that the NIH intramural research program constitutes the single most outstanding biomedical and behavioral research institute in the world. The NIH campus brings together scientists with experience in many different fields to conduct research and facilitates extensive and fruitful collaboration. In addition, the diversified assembly of investigators in the intramural program serves as an asset in the administration of the NIH extramural programs. The Committee has provided the NIH intramural program with an additional $27,180,000 which will enable NIH to support the intramural program at the 1984 operational level, as well as to enhance further its scientific activities. This amount restores at least 442 positions (full-time equivalent) which were reduced in the FY 1985 request. The Committee believes that the proposed personnel reduction would adversely affect the intramural research program. This policy seems especially unwise at a time when the intramural program is producing such remarkable achievements as the recent discovery of the probable cause of AIDS.

The Committee believes that real dollar reductions proposed in the portion of total NIH resources available for other funding mechanisms such as centers, other research grants, and R&D contracts will disrupt the balance of programs that translate the results of basic research into treatment and prevention modes. The bill includes funds to support these programs at current levels.

In addition, the Committee has recommended selective increases including $24,621,000 to enable NIH to support an estimated additional 200 research career awards with a $10,000 increase in salary support; $3,304,000 for the minority biomedical research support program; $36,170,000 for major new clinical trials; and $28,221,000 for biomedical research support of which $10,000,000 is to be used for the shared instrumentation program. The Committee has long recognized the importance of research centers in bringing together the scientific and clinical expertise necessary for studying identifiable investigative and clinical problems and for rapidly applying discoveries generated by basic research. The Committee has provided increases for centers in most of the institutes. In addition, the Committee has included $20 million for the NIH Office of the Director for a new program of center grants with the twin goals of focussing on medical diseases or disorders which have a disproportionate impact upon the minority community, and of drawing into the extramural programs many fine educational institutions which have hitherto not participated adequately in them.

A number of laboratory buildings on the NIH campus have been operational for approximately 40 years. The support systems and architectural features of these buildings are obsolete and deteriorated. The Committee has included an additional $10,130,000 to enable NIH to continue the renovations which have been planned. In addition, the Committee has added $500,000 to update the design for the proposed National Institute of Child Health and Human Development building and its associated parking structure. This building would permit the consolidation of the intramural program of the NICHD, which is now scattered in 12 separate buildings.

The Committee has rejected the proposal to charge patients participating in research protocols at the Warren G. Magnuson Clinical Center for "nonresearch related services." This proposal could disrupt the unique research mission of the Clinical Center and adversely affect the ability of the NIH to recruit research subjects into its studies. The Committee has, therefore, restored the $7,500,000 budget reduction which was associated with this proposal.

ENTITLEMENT ACTIVITIES

The remaining $65.4 billion in the bill for the Department of Health and Human Services is for the entitlement programs administered by this Department. The largest items are $21.6 billion for Medicaid, $11.6 billion for Supplemental Security Income, $6.7 billion for Assistance Payments including AFDC, $2.7 billion for the Social Services Block Grant and $19.8 billion in payments to the Medicare trust funds. These programs are authorized for the most part by various titles of the Social Security Act. The amounts included by the Committee are to fund these programs under the provisions of the Act as currently constituted. The Committee has rejected those proposals in the President's budget which would have amended the basic laws for the Medicaid and Aid to Families with Dependent Children programs. This is a matter under the jurisdiction of the authorizing committees. The amount recommended in the bill is $4.8 billion above the level appropriated for these entitlements in 1984. This is due partially to the provision of $2.6 billion in FY 1986 advance funding for the Black Lung and Supplemental Security Income accounts. Advance funding for the other entitlements has been included for several years and the Committee has approved the President's request to include advances for these additional programs in the 1985 bill.

The entitlement programs administered by the Department of Health and Human Services are at the heart of the safety net which provides basic subsistence support for the indigent. Over 25 million Americans benefit directly from the Medicaid, Supplemental Security Income, Foster Care and Aid to Families with Dependent Children programs. In addition to these programs for the indigent, the bill includes $19,807 million to subsidize part B services under Medicare. The $2,125 million increase included by the Committee for this payment will benefit virtually all Americans over the age of 65.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

The Committee bill includes a total of $17,191,262,000 for the Department of Education. This amount is $2,339,384,000 over the President's budget and $2,473,223,000 over the 1984 appropriations for the programs considered by the Committee.

The Committee deferred consideration of $506,630,000 requested in the budget for the Impact Aid program because part of this program is not authorized at the present time. When the authorization is enacted, the Committee will take necessary action to provide an appropriation for the program.

For chapter 1 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act, the bill includes $3,680,000,000 an increase of $200,000,000 over the budget and the 1984 appropriation. This program helps the States and local school districts provide supplementary educational services to about 5 million disadvantaged children.

For Special Programs concerning elementary and secondary education, the bill includes $713,559,000 an increase of $185,692,000 over the 1984 appropriation. Included in the total figure is $678,879,000 for the Chapter 2 block grant program, which is an increase of $199,459,000 over the 1984 appropriation but a decrease of $50,000,000 from the budget request. The Committee felt that a 50 percent increase was a little too high so we made an adjustment to bring it more in line with other program increases. For other special programs, we restored funding for civil rights training and advisory services, Ellender fellowships, women's educational equity, and territorial assistance. The budget has proposed to terminate these programs.

In the bill, we provide $143,656,000 for bilingual education. This amount is $4,411,000 over the budget request. The amount in the bill is the full amount authorized under current law and we estimate that about 250,000 children of limited English speaking ability would be assisted in 1985.

We recommend $1,298,540,000 for education of handicapped children, an increase of $84,095,000 over the budget and $59,125,000 over the 1984 appropriation. This amount will help the States and local school districts provide special education services to about 4.2 million handicapped children.

For rehabilitation services to disabled youths and adults, the bill includes $1,215,400,000, an increase of $123,740,000 over the budget request. Included in the total is $1,092,800,000 for the basic State grant program, $38,000,000 for the National Institute of Handicapped Research, $13,000,000 for projects with industry, $22,000,000 for the independent living program, and $4,200,000 for the Helen Keller Center.

For vocational and adult education, the Committee recommends $831,314,000, the full amounts authorized under current law for these programs. This amount is the same as the budget request and the 1984 appropriation. Vocational education funds are used to support programs that provide education, training, and basic instruction needed by persons to successfully compete and advance in the labor market. Enrollments in vocational education have increased by more than 85 percent in the last 10 years, with current enrollment totaling 16.5 million secondary, postsecondary, and adult students. The total includes $100,000,000 for adult education to help States provide literacy training for 2,100,000 adults.

For student financial assistance, the bill includes $5,079,000,000, an increase of $1,425,000,000 over the budget request, and $1,092,140,000 over the amount appropriated for 1984. The budget request is based on a legislative proposal to restructure existing student aid programs. Since Congress has taken no action on this proposal, the Committee's recommendation is based on current law. The Committee recommends $3,753,000,000 for the Pell Grant program, an increase of $953,000,000 over the 1984 appropriation.

The total for Pell Grants includes $353,000,000 to cover a funding shortage estimated for 1983 and 1984. The Committee bill would also provide sufficient funding to permit a maximum Pell Grant of $2,100 compared to $1,900 for the previous year. Also included in the bill is $425,000,000 for supplemental grants, $600,000,000 for college work study, $200,000,000 for direct loan capital contributions, and $76,000,000 for State student incentive grants.

For the guaranteed student loan program, the bill includes $3,046,000,000 an increase of $205,323,000 over the budget and $790,760,000 over the 1984 funding level. The amount recommended is based on a current estimate of funds required for 1985.

For higher education assistance programs, the bill includes $459,391,000, an increase of $207,320,000 over the budget and $50,525,000 over the 1984 appropriation. In general the Committee has restored funding for these programs to the 1984 appropriation level including special programs for the disadvantaged, strenghtening developing institutions, cooperative education, international education, and graduate training. The Committee bill includes $50,000,000 for academic facilities grants under Title VII of the Higher Education Act. The Committee feels that all colleges and universities should have an opportunity to compete for funds to help institutions meet some of their facility needs. The Committee bill also includes $6,000,000 to endow the Community College of American Samoa and the College of Micronesia as land-grant institutions.

For college housing loans, the bill provides $40,000,000 in authority to make new loans during 1985. This is the same loan level as provided for 1984. For the National Insititute of Education, the Committee recommends approval of the budget request which would provide an increase of $6,000,000 over the 1984 appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, this bill includes $86,880,000, the same amount as in 1984 for library programs. No funds were included in the budget for these programs. For the American Printing House for the Blind, we recommend $5.5 million; for the National Technical Institute for the Deaf, $31,400,000; for Gallaudet College $58.7 million; for Howard University, $158,230,000; for the Office of Civil Rights, $42,633,000; and for the Office of Inspector General, $15,312,000.

RELATED AGENCIES

The bill includes $788,177,000 for 11 related agencies. This is entirely descretionary spending. We exceed the budget request by $32,665,000.

The Action agency is funded at $147,722,000, an increase of $27,505,000 over the budget request. We provide $17,200,000 for the VISTA program, an increase of $11,400,000 over the budget. The Administration proposed to eliminate this program. We added $13,945,000 over the budget for the older American volunteer programs, namely Foster Grandparents, Retired Senior Volunteers, and Senior Companions. These are fine programs that the Committee has always strongly supported. They are certainly deserving of this small increase.

The Committee hopes that Action will take steps to tighten up and improve the management of the agency. The Committee report contains several recommendations along this line that the Committee hopes the agency will implement.

The bill contains one new agency this year, the National Council on the Handicapped, funded at $500,000.

The remaining related agencies are basically continued at the current rate. The Corporation for Public Broadcasting is not yet authorized and has been left out of the bill. The House Rules, of course, prevent us from including unauthorized items.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to join with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, one of the most respected Members of the House, BILL NATCHER of Kentucky, in bringing H.R. 6028, the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985 to the House floor.

It is an honor and a distinct privilege to serve as the ranking minority member of this subcommittee with the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky and all the members of the subcommittee.

This is one of the most important bills considered by the House. It is a bill that touches millions of Americans: The worker, the young, the old, the disabled, and the poor.

It is a bill that demonstrates the compassion of the American people toward their fellow citizens.

It is a bill that demonstrates this Nation's commitment to its future, through the education of its youth.

It is a bill that contributes to the desire of our hard-working people for productive employment, through job training, workplace safety, and the enforcement of laws protecting our workers.

Mr. Chairman, the bill we bring to the floor recommends a total of $96.1 billion in Federal funding, including $85.6 billion in current year appropriations, and $10.5 billion in advance appropriations. That is $1.7 billion below the comparable fiscal year 1984 appropriation, and $3.7 billion above the President's request.

The primary reason for the decrease from last year is a $7 billion decrease in the Department of Labor, due to the decline in unemployment, balanced by a smaller increase in health entitlements and guaranteed student loans, as well as $3 billion in first time advance appropriations requested by the administration.

In addition to the $96.1 billion in direct appropriations, the bill recommends $7.5 billion in trust fund appropriations.

Of the total recommended by the committee, $70.9 billion, or 74 percent is for entitlements, over which the committee has no budget control. That is a reduction of $1.3 billion below fiscal year 1984, and an increase of $169 million over the budget request.

As in the past, the committee, for the most part, accepted the administration's budget request, which in some cases assume legislative savings that have not been enacted by the authorizing committees.[1]

The balance of the committee's recommendations, $25.2 billion, is for discretionary appropriations. That is $421.7 below fiscal year 1984, and $3.5 billion over the budget request.

However, if you correct for the fact that the fiscal year 1984 appropriation includes $2.9 billion in one-time forward funding for the Job Training Partnership Act, the committee's recommendation is nearly $2.5 billion above the fiscal year 1984 figures for discretionary programs, primarily in the areas of education and biomedical research.

In addition, the committee deferred consideration of a large number of programs, because their authorizations for fiscal year 1985 are not in place.

Those programs range from low income energy assistance, to Head Start, to community health centers, to the health block grants. For these progams, a total of $7.8 billion was appropriated in fiscal year 1984, and a total of $7.1 billion was requested by the administration for fiscal year 1985.

Let me make one quick point here. After the subcommittee markup, an increased authorization of $478 million for the maternal and child health block grant was enacted in the Deficit Reduction Act.

That is close to the level I proposed in a bill I introduced, H.R. 4661. While we have deferred on maternal child health care, I will support a level as close to the $478 million in the Senate bill as we can as part of the conference on this bill.

[1] The Senate, which used CBO estimates rather than the budget request for mandatory programs, is about $1.8 billion higher so that's the latest estimate of the underestimation in the budget request for these programs.

Overall, then, for discretionary programs, this bill is $2.5 billion over the comparable fiscal year 1984 level. That is the level of increase provided for in the House-passed budget resolution, and the subcommittee's informal 301(b) allocation based on that resolution.

If you take the $25.2 billion in discretionary authority recommended by the committee, and add the 1984 level of funding for programs deferred by the subcommittee, because they have not been authorized by the committees, you come up with a total of $1,712,000 below the $33 billion allocation target provided for in this bill.

It is my belief that with this bill, we are within striking distance of a bill that will be signed by the President. We are above the Senate bill, and the so-called rose garden agreement, which is said to be $32.6 billion, but, when the scorekeeping mechanisms used are taken into account, is somewhat higher. I have looked at the House and the Senate bills very closely, and there are enough differences in the amounts provided for various programs by each that it should be possible in conference to reach a compromise that will be acceptable to all parties, and also acceptable to the White House.

Last year, as you will recall, a Labor/HHS bill was signed into law for the first time in 5 years. It is my intention, and I believe it is the intention of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, to work toward that goal again. I am supporting this bill, because I believe it provides the basis to work to an agreement that will be acceptable.

HIGHLIGHTS

This bill, Mr. Chairman, responds to the crisis in this Nation's education system that has been at the forefront of the Nation's attention for the last year, and recommends significant increases in the appropriations for a number of education programs. It recommends $17.2 billion for the Department of Education, $2.5 billion over fiscal year 1984, and $2.3 billion over the budget request.

The bill provides $200 million of the $250 million increase requested for the chapter 2 block grant by the President, as well as the $6 million increase requested for the National Institute of Education.

In addition, it provides an increase of $200 million for chapter 1, compensatory education for the disadvantaged, to maintain the level of services for children in need of remedial education.

In student financial assistance, the bill provides $5.1 billion, $1.1 billion over 1984, and $1.4 billion over the budget request.

By far, the most significant increase is provided for Pell grants, with an increase of $600 million to raise the maximum grant from $1900 to $2100, and an additional $343 million to cover the unexpected shortfall in the 1983 and 1984 program years, due to a higher than expected number of applicants.

In addition, increases are recommended for other student financial aid programs—SEOG's, work study, and direct loans—which are important for independent colleges with tuitions higher than the public universities.

Mr. Chairman, we have fallen behind, in the past several years, in providing opportunities for low income and middle income students to obtain a college education, while tuition costs have climbed. This bill will go a long way toward restoring our commitment to equal opportunity and equal access to a higher education.

In the Department of Health and Human Services, under which more than half of the discretionary programs are not considered because they're not authorized, the bill maintains our commitment to biomedical research at the National Institutes of Health.

The bill recommends $4.8 billion for NIH, $600 million over the comparable '84 level, and $500 million over the budget request.

Mr. Chairman, during our hearings, we heard from a group of Nobel laureates, who indicated that the declining percentage of grants being funded threatened to turn researchers away from science, and endangered the future of our scientific enterprise. NIH is the foremost biomedical research organization in the world, responsible for many of the miracles of modern science. It is an investment that pays off handsomely in saved lives and improved health for all Americans.

In the Department of Labor, the bill provides $3.850 billion for job training, an increase of 214 million over fiscal year 1984, and $213 million over the budget request. This includes an additional $100 million for summer youth employment for both the summers of 1985 and 1986, to bring the funding level in line with the funding provided in urgent supplemental appropriations, House Joint Resolution 492, that was recently enacted.

It includes $6.5 million to initiate a Bureau of Labor Statistics report on plant closings and major layoffs.

It also includes $1 million in first-time direct funding for the Women's Bureau's demonstration programs for the employment and training for women, an amendment I proposed in full committee. Since I didn't get a chance there, I would like to thank the gentlelady from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] for her support of the increased funding for the displaced homemakers network.

In the bill, the committee did not agree with the recommendation for 10 new positions in the Labor Management Standards Enforcement Office. As the committee report indicates, that was based on an Inspector General report indicating that there are serious questions about the wisdom of recent expansions which have taken place within LMSE in the compliance audit program. If the IG's report is accurate, it is apparent that the compliance audit program has failed to achieve the goals for which it was created and has diverted department resources from productive enforcement efforts. Based on that IG report, the logical conclusion could very well follow that the Department ought to consider abolishing the program outright.

Under education for the handicapped, personnel preparation, until the required manpower study is completed, the percentage of funds used for in-service and continuing education training should remain the same as in fiscal year 1984.

In addition, with regard to certain statements made in the committee report relating to the provision of information by the Office of Special Education and Rehabilitation Services, it is my belief that the event that transpired was a onetime occurrence that has been resolved satisfactorily. In no way, in my opinion, should this be considered a reflection on the competence of the individuals in that Office, who I might say have my confidence and respect for the years of valuable service in building the quality programs in the Office of Special Education.

With respect to another portion of the committee report, relating to the Centers for Disease Control, yesterday I received a letter from Dr. James O. Mason, Director of CDC, expressing concern about the language. I would like to include the text of that letter in the RECORD at this point:

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, CENTERS FOR DISEASE CONTROL, Atlanta GA, July 31, 1984.

Hon. SILVIO O. CONTE,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CONTE: We have reviewed the report accompanying H.R. 6028, the fiscal year 1985 Appropriations for Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies (House Report 98-911). It includes language on pages 26 and 27 relating to the programs of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) about which I, as the newly appointed Director of the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), am concerned particularly in light of the recent aggressive actions taken to address the issues of the scientific excellence and productivity of the Institute.

For the last 2 years, NIOSH has had in place a significantly strengthened peer-review system. In late 1981, NIOSH management reviewed the then existing peer-review system and implemented specific measures to strengthen the system, including the following: (1) all research projects sponsored by NIOSH must undergo peer review, including all extramural projects and those intramural projects involving an effort of 1 or more person years; (2) each peer-review committee must include at least two technical reviewers from outside the Institute, and all reviewers must submit a written analysis of the project; (3) peer-review committee meetings are required to be open to the public and are to be announced in the Federal Register 15 days before the meeting; (4) all comments from reviewers must be addressed in writing to the researcher and are submitted to the Research Division Director for review and clearance before the research can begin. NIOSH modeled its peer-review system on the NIH system, which is highly regarded throughout the scientific community. I believe this effort had been successful in improving the quality of NIOSH research.

We have also taken additional steps to ensure the scientific credibility of the Institute's research program. In 1983 a Science Advisory Staff composed of internal NIOSH scientists was established to report to the Deputy Director of NIOSH. This staff provides internal scientific review of research projects and operations. Also in 1983 the first Board of Scientific Counselors in the Institute's history was established. This group, composed of 10 of the Nation's leading scientists from outside government in the fields of occupational medicine, nursing, toxicology, epidemiology, neurology, engineering, chemistry, and psychology, advises the Director on all aspects of research conducted by NIOSH.

Regarding the allegation that the Institute may be top-heavy with administrative personnel while understaffed in trained scientists, one of the reasons for the transfer of NIOSH headquarters to Atlanta, Georgia, was to preserve positions for the Institute's scientists. The physical separation of NIOSH from CDC headquarters had indeed resulted in an unnecessary over-investment in NIOSH of resources for administration. Because CDC had a full set of similar administrative services in Atlanta, the move to Atlanta resulted in consolidation and in the reduction of NIOSH resources devoted to administration. It must be recalled that eliminating the duplication in administrative expenditures took place against a background of reductions in budget and personnel expenditures throughout government. Even so, Congressionally approved reductions in the Institute's budget from fiscal year 1980 to fiscal year 1982 were taken without reducing the number of scientific staff on board at that time. Of the 773 budgeted positions allocated to NIOSH this fiscal year, only 125 (16 percent) in Atlanta, Cincinnati, and Morgantown are devoted to administrative management.

A review of the regulatory agenda of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) reveals that in the last 3 years its major concerns have been heavily oriented to issues identified by NIOSH and recommendations made to OSHA by the Institute. Ethylene dibromide, ethylene oxide, cotton dust, oil and gas well drilling, 1,3-butadiene, benzene, asbestos, and a number of others are on the regulatory agenda of OSHA as a consequence of new findings, new analyses, and new recommendations by NIOSH, including numerous observations from studies on human effects, as well as the result of epidemiologic field investigations involving workers.

Over the past 4 years, NIOSH has issued 42 policy statements recommending action to protect American workers; of these, 28 have been or are being considered for regulatory action by OSHA. In addition, NIOSH has contributed to every rulemaking procedure initiated by OSHA over the past 3 years.

We recognize the need for more data on human effects, and clearly see the need for longitudinal studies, as well as other types of epidemiologic studies, in occupational groups. We clearly understand and appreciate the unique access we have to cohorts of workers as a result of the "right-of-entry" authority. NIOSH has not decreased its effort in the area of industrywide studies. On the contrary, despite a reduction in the overall NIOSH budget, the funds allocated to industrywide studies over the past 4 years exceed the funds allocated to industrywide studies in the previous 4 years. During the same period, NIOSH has completed more studies, issued more technical reports, and published more scientific articles in peer-reviewed journals than previously. In fact, from fiscal year 1980 through fiscal year 1983 NIOSH issued an average of 27 final industrywide reports per year. In addition, NIOSH scientists published an average of 88 technical reports and scientific journal articles relating to the Institute's industrywide studies per year. The average number of ongoing industrywide studies has remained virtually constant between 60 and 70 per year.

While we recognize the importance of the industrywide studies activity, it is only one part of our epidemiologic program. The conduct of health hazard evaluations at the rate of approximately 500 per year during the past 3 years is a crucial source of data on the human health effects of various exposures. A three-fold increase in the number of reports resulting from these investigations has occurred over the past 4 years.

We believe that the actions the Institute has already taken satisfy the concerns expressed in the report. Nevertheless, we will proceed with the development of the plan as directed in the report. As part of that development, I would be interested in learning in more detail the specific concerns of the Committee so that we may address them directly. I am sending an identical letter to Congressman Natcher.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES O. MASON, M.D., DR. P.H.,
Assistant Surgeon General, Director.

Mr. Chairman, the Labor/HHS/Education bill is one of the most difficult bills considered by the House. It takes a tremendous amount of work and patience. We began our hearings on February 21 of this year, and held hearings 4 days a week through May 17. Our hearings are printed in 10 volumes containing over 13,000 pages of proceedings. We heard from more than 300 administration witnesses, and 281 public witnesses, including 26 Members of Congress. And on every one of those pages, and from every one of those public witnesses, there is a call for additional funds to meet a need that is not being met.

Within the current climate of fiscal restraint and the overshadowing Federal deficit, it is a simple fact of life that not every need can be met. It becomes incumbent upon the committee to set priorities, to weigh needs, and to do the best we can within the limits that the Congress, and the economic situation, have placed upon us.

Yet I am sure we will hear today that we should have done more here, or we did not do enough there.

On the other hand, I am sure we will hear today complaints from the other side of the coin, saying there's too much in here. Take a meat ax, and cut away. Forget the weeks of hearings. Forget the effort to weigh the needs in different areas and come up with a set of priorities that can make a difference in this great country of ours.

The task that this subcommittee is charged with, balancing the needs of our people with the need for restraint, in a fiscally responsible and humanly responsive way, is one that we take seriously, both for its effects on our people and on the Federal budget.

We have taken the amount of discretionary funds provided in 1984, and stayed within that total. We used some of the funds provided in 1984 to forward fund the job training partnership for some justified increases in 1985 in education and health, with change to spare.

We have stayed within the House budget resolution, and the subcommittee's allocation of the ceiling set by that budget resolution.

This bill makes a strong statement about the importance of education, and the Federal commitment to excellence. For all of you who agree on the importance of these education programs, and believe it deserves the priority we have given it, I urge you to support the bill.

Last year, for the first time in 5 years, BILL NATCHER and I and the subcommittee worked out an agreement that got a bill signed for the first time in 5 years in a ceremony at the White House. I believe we can do that again, and that this bill offers a good starting point.

We can take this bill, with its priorities on education, and health, and job training, and reach a compromise with the Senate that will be acceptable to all parties.

But it is important that we take a bill with the priorities of the House to conference.

If we are going to bargain, let us bargain over the importance of education.

And if we are bargaining over the importance of education, let us bargain from a position of strength.

I support this bill, and urge its adoption.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan, my good friend, and a very valuable member of the committee.

Mr. PURSELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the ranking minority member, SIL CONTE, and our distinguished leader, BILL NATCHER who have presented what I call a bipartisan bill, one of the most effective leaders in the House and I concur.

It looks like our bill is stronger than the Senate with respect to education. I think you outlined specific programs quite well. One of the programs that will be funded at a later date, and I wanted a colloquy here with you, is the important nurses program in the United States. It is my understanding that this program has not been authorized, at this point.

Once it has been authorized, will it be reflected later in funding in either a continuing resolution or a supplemental? What is your best estimate of that timetable? Could you make a judgment there?

Mr. CONTE. The probable vehicle is the continuing resolution or if the Senate puts it in, in this bill, we can take care of that in conference.

Let me say that no man on that committee has fought harder for the nursing profession than our good friend from Michigan, CARL PURSELL.

I have always said, said it many times on the floor of the House, when nursing programs were cut out here, that you never turn your back to a nurse. I will tell you, CARL PURSELL had never turned his back to a nurse.

Mr. PURSELL. Thank you very much.

I also want to comment on the work of the subcommittee, both sides, with respect to the Pell grants for students for the future of this country. I think they have done an outstanding job, sort of reversing earlier trends some years back and have filled that gap and that vacuum very well.

I hope the conference, particularly on the Senate side is supportive of the work that has been done here by this House subcommittee.

I thank the gentleman for his time.

Mr. CONTE. the gentleman is absolutely right. We want to thank him for his help in the education field on this bill.

This is the greatest, the best bill, as far as education, in the history of the U.S. Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has consumed 17 minutes.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to commend the chairman and all the members of the committee for this bill. As a member of the subcommittee, I am well aware of the competing forces for more money for meritorious programs at a time when funding must be limited but the bill represents the best solution possible under the circumstances.

I want to point out that we keep hearing talk about how we must cut Government expenditures and especially the nonmilitary discretionary expenditures. Most of the nonmilitary discretionary expenditures are in this bill. We are talking about cancer research, heart research, programs for the elderly, vocational training, we are talking about heart research, we are talking about education; they are talking about all these things when they want to reduce nonmilitary spending further.

Well, if they really want to cut more, they must do it in this bill. So this is the time for people who want to make more nonmilitary reductions to stand up and put a list in the record of things they want to cut and how much they want to cut.

While they are at it, I wish they would do this: $36 billion of the money in this bill goes to State and local governments. While they are putting their list in the record, they should also tell those local and State governments, how they are going to raise the money they will not receive as a result of the reduction. This is the time to stand up and tell people exactly where they stand. If we are going to have honesty in government and talk about taxes, do it right now; this is the place.

I think this is a good bill as it is written, and I fully support it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am very proud to serve on this subcommittee. I have said this before, but let me say it again that the gentleman from Kentucky, our chairman, is the best subcommittee chairman in all of the Congress; there is no man for whom I have a higher regard, no man who runs a better hearing, no man who is easier to work with, and I think all of the members of our committee find serving under his leadership a fascinating, interesting, and rewarding experience.

These compliments apply equally to my ranking minority member who influences so much of what happens in the Congress. It is a pleasure to serve with him and with the Members on both sides of the aisle on this subcommittee.

I might say also, Mr. Chairman, that we have an excellent staff, who deals with a tremendous amount of detail and the interests of many, many, very worthwhile constituencies, and they do it with great ability and with great commitment.

Mr. Chairman, the members of the subcommittee worked very hard to produce a bill which could be supported by all the Members of this body. I think this bill is such a product.

It provides $96.1 billion in new budget authority for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. This is a decrease of $1.7 billion from the 1984 appropriation and a $3.7 billion increase over the President's budget request. This excludes $7.9 billion in funding deferred due to a lack of authorization.

Entitlement programs encompass 74 percent of the bill. Over this amount, the Appropriations Committee has absolutely no control.

The remaining discretionary spending equals $25.2 billion, a decrease from fiscal year 1984 of $421 million, which excludes those amounts I previously mentioned as deferred.

To BILL NATCHER's credit, this bill is not full of irresponsible spending increases. Throughout our markup, there was an effort to focus spending increases only on programs where there was a true consensus of support and critical need. No increase came without debate. Not everyone on the subcommittee was pleased with each program level. In my view, no program will suffer from the priorities established in this legislation and many will benefit.

The bill includes very important funding for health research and education. In the health area, the bill includes $4.8 billion for the National Institutes of Health, in my view one of the most important items funded by this bill.

This is an increase of $505 million over the budget request and $598 million over fiscal year 1984 funding. With that amount, 6,200 new and competing research grants will be funded by the NIH, the highest number since I have served as a member of the subcommittee.

Also in the NIH, the committee report includes directives to increase the funding available for the study of Alzheimer's disease in the National Institute of Aging. The subcommittee added $5 million to the bill, establishing five new Alzheimer's research centers for the total in the centers program of $5.8 billion. This is a significant increase and one I strongly supported.

The NIH section also includes important language on contraceptive research, Epstein-Barr virus, myopia or nearsightedness, and blood screening for acquired immune deficiency syndrome [AIDS]. Also, the bill calls for the formation of a urology research coordinating committee—an effort I initiated.

In the Department of Education, the bill includes $3,753,000,000 for the Pell Grant Program—this amount is $953 million over the amount approved in fiscal year 1984. The Pell Grant Program provides funds to needy students to attend postsecondary educational institutions. This increase—almost $1 billion—is extremely important in light of the Presidental Commission report on excellence in education. I continue to hear from my constitutents, both students and their parents, of their strong support for this program. These funds will allow an estimated 2.6 to 2.8 million students to attend college in academic year 1984-85.

There are no funds, I am sorry to say, in the bill for the impact aid program because it is not currently authorized. Impact aid funds are very important in my district and I look forward to seeing these funds included in the bill at a later date or in the continuing resolution which will follow this and any other uncompleted appropriations bills.

The bill includes $38 million for the National Institute of Handicapped Research [NIHR]. The activities of the NIHR are important to all of us—not just the handicapped or the disabled. Touring the Rehabilitation Institute in Chicago has only furthered my belief in this very important research. This level is an increase of $2 million from 1984.

The bill includes an increase in funding of $6 million for the National Institute of Education. The bill does not include a directive on the lab and centers competition to be held by the NIE—as does the Senate bill—but I hope this issue will be resolved in conference with the Senate's restrictive language regarding the competition removed. The NIE has worked long and hard to plan for this competition and I hope the Congress will have the sense to not waste this investment and allow NIE to go forward in the regions the Secretary has determined—thus assuring a fair an open lab and center competition in all States.

The bill includes an increase of almost $200 million for the chapter 2 program in the Department of Education. This increase in the State block grant program is directed at identifiable projects to improve school effectiveness—a very good investment in my view.

The programs for the handicapped receive funding increases under this bill. H.R. 6028 includes $1.2 billion for these programs, an increase of $84 million from the budget request and $59 million over 1984. I was pleased to support these levels.

The National Diffusion Network and the other programs currently at jeopardy in the Secretary's discretionary fund because of the Chicago court order are taken care of by earmarkings in the bill. The Committee is taking an unusual action here but one I believe was essential to ensure that these important programs will continue in fiscal year 1985.

Once again, the Committee report includes a directive that the Department of Education encourage those financial institutions offering graduate student loans to also offer the PLUS loans. I have been very pleased to see how the availability of the PLUS loans has increased and I hope the Department will continue its progress in this important area.

For the related agencies, the bill includes the authority to transfer $2,424 million for the activities of the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission, a very small amount for this very important commission established by the Congress to advise it and the executive branch on issues related to medicare reimbursement under the new diagnosis related groups [DRG] system. This commission will play a key role in controlling health care costs and I was very pleased to see these funds included in the bill.

Also in the related agencies, the Railroad Retirement Board has experienced difficulties with waste, fraud and abuse in its operation as has been reported by the GAO. The Committee report includes a directive for the Board to further identify the source of these problems and to provide the Committee with a review of the actions taken to rectify the situation. I look forward to hearing from the Board on its progress prior to the 1986 budget hearings.

I have highlighted only some of the important programs in this legislation. Mr. NATCHER and Mr. CONTE have said over and over again that this bill is where the "people" programs are located. I am proud to serve as a member of the Labor, HHS and Education Subcommittee and ask that my colleagues keep in mind the many people that will benefit from your vote in support of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 6028, the fiscal year 1985 appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. This is an excellent bill that was crafted with the great sensitivity that is always displayed by Subcommittee Chairman BILL NATCHER and ranking minority member SILVIO CONTE.

I want to address my comments to three particular parts of this bill which are of great interest to the people of Connecticut and the Nation.

The first is funding for student assistance. Once again, this bill provides a reassurance to parents and students from low- and middle-income families that there will be help for them to finance the ever-increasing cost of a college education.

For the five major student assistance programs, there is more than $5 billion in new budget authority in the bill, a level which is more than $1.4 billion above the administration's budget request. In addition, there is another $3,046 million for guaranteed student loans.

Taken together, these funds mean that there will not be an appreciable drop in eligibility for student aid, nor will there be a decrease in the real value of the student assistance dollars that are provided to eligible students.

To the student in Connecticut, where the cost of living and the cost of tuition in both public and private colleges and universities are high, this bill is very good news.

From another perspective, this bill also merits support. The committee has chosen to include more than $47 million for State inspection of nursing homes which serve medicare beneficiaries. This is an increase of more than $8 million over the fiscal year 1984 level.

As one who chaired Connecticut's panel which investigated the nursing home industry in the State, I can tell the House that it is absolutely essential to have annual inspections of skilled nursing facilities and other institutions which tend to elderly, infirm men and women. These funds will help ensure that annual inspections are carried out.

The third important issue, Mr. Chairman, is the commitment in this bill to Research on Alzheimer's disease. This disorder affects nearly 2 million Americans, but it is a tremendously complex disease, and the cause for it has yet to be discovered.

While the administration did request an increase of $1.2 million in the National Institute on Aging's budget for Alzheimer's disease research, the committee has determined that this is not enough. Thus, the committee has ordered an even larger increase in research project grants on Alzheimer's disease.

In addition, the committee has added $5 million to fund five more Alzheimer's disease research centers, for a total of $8.5 million in fiscal year 1985 for these centers.

Again, Mr. Chairman, this is an excellent bill which deserves our support.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished ranking minority member for yielding me this time, and I take this time for the purpose of asking the distinguished chairman of the committee some questions in two areas that are matters that, as he knows, have been of concern to me.

The first of those is the funding to deal with this dread scourge we have faced, the AIDS epidemic, with its alarming death rate.

Mr. Chairman, although funds have not been earmarked specifically for AIDS, it is my understanding that the bill before us provides an increase over the budget of $505 million for the National Institutes of Health, part of which can be used to combat AIDS; is my understanding correct and is that number correct?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman from New York's understanding is correct.

Mr. GREEN. Further, Mr. Chairman, it is also my understanding that the subcommittee has called for a report to be submitted by NIH outlining any additional funding requirements that NIH may have in order to respond to the recent discoveries on AIDS and utilize those. Am I correct in assuming that it is the intention of the subcommittee to consider additional funding to NIH in a supplemental appropriation should the report, which I understand is due on September 1, indicate the need for such further funds?

Mr. NATCHER. If the gentleman would yield further, I would say to the gentleman that he is correct. And, further, I would like the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] to know that we appreciate his assistance each year with our bill. As a member of the full Committee on Appropriations, he is not only interested in this bill, but he has worked with us all down through the years and we appreciate it.

Mr. GREEN. I thank the distinguished chairman for that comment.

If I could turn to one other area and that is the question of the biomedical sciences program.

Mr. Chairman, the 2 years prior to this year your subcommittee included language in its report urging the Secretary of Education to fund from his discretionary fund the biomedical sciences program. But he has thus far declined to do so.

The program, which assists minority students with an affinity for math, science and biomedical sciences, is in danger of coming to its final year with no funds available for an evaluation of the worth of the program.

I certainly understand the chairman's reluctance to include language a third time, but am I correct in assuming that the Secretary still has the authority, should he so wish, to fund the needed $1 million for this program evaluation from the discretionary funds allotted to him in the bill?

Mr. NATCHER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GREEN. To continue, should there be an authorization for this program, which I understand is a distinct possibility, would the subcommittee then consider funding for the program in a fiscal year 1985 supplemental?

Mr. NATCHER. If the gentleman would yield further, I would say to the gentleman, yes, should there be an authorization for funding for this program, it would be given serious consideration in a fiscal 1985 supplemental bill. Every consideration would be given to it.

Mr. GREEN. I do thank the distinguished chairman for responding to my questions on the biomedical sciences program.

We have a situation where the program was following one cohort of minority and disadvantaged children, starting with the first year in high school and next year is to be their first year in college. This next year was the year that we were to reap the benefits of seeing whether this program was working to attract more minority and disadvantaged children into these science areas.

The program has been included as part of a block grant to States, but rather obviously we cannot expect States to use money that is given to them on a block grant basis to conduct an evaluation of a national program. So if there is to be an evaluation it would have to be done at the national level.

In conclusion, let me congratulate the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking minority member on a good bill in very difficult times. I certainly share their hope and expectation that we can produce a bill that will achieve all the priorities that we want in these vital areas and still be acceptable to the administration in fiscal terms.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], the chairman of the full Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to congratulate my friend from Kentucky, Hon. BILL NATCHER, chairman of the subcommittee, with whom I have served many years. He does a fine job in the House of Representatives. His record of attendance will never be reached in the history of this country, and I say here that his record of service to the people of his district, his State and the Nation, will be hard to match, as will be his standing with his colleagues.

I commend, too, the ranking member, Hon. SILVO CONTE with whom I work very closely and other members of this strong subcommittee.

I commend all of them on this bill which takes care of education and health and more than any other bill, the well-being of the people of the Nation. In my position as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I am on all subcommittees and none does a better job that does this subcommittee.

Mr. Chairman, with so much money going into military spending, almost around the world, it is imperative that we take care of our own people, our own country, for it is our people who have to provide for the other activities, for the military and all the rest.

Mr. Chairman, after all is said and done for real defense we must have a strong economy, public support, as well as capability and readiness.

Our committee recognizes this fact and we act accordingly. Our Committee on Appropriations is keeping below the President's budget ceiling, below the ceiling budget approved by the House, as we have committed ourselves to do.

We have exercised our right to recommend funds in line with the testimony before us and according to our belief, for a strong country, a strong people is necessary for our present and our future.

We will hold the line. But as I said many years ago, it is not what we spend on our own country that creates our problems. I say again to our friend from Kentucky [BILL NATCHER], we take pride in your record of constant attendance for 30 years. It is unbelievable yet true. But also we appreciate your record of service.

Mr. Chairman, back to the bill, with all deference to our President, to the Bureau of the Budget which recommends, it is up to the Congress, the peoples branch, to determine how much and what for. Education, the health and well-being of our people must come first.

When we finish with the bill before us I shall call up the second supplemental appropriations bill where we make reductions of more than $900, million, by putting first things first.

My colleagues, I urge your support of the bill before us and the one which follows.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 9 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EARLY], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. EARLY. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, Chairman NATCHER, Mr. CONTE, and ranking minority members, I am extremely honored to serve on this particular subcommittee. As Chairman NATCHER suggested in his opening remarks, this is the people's bill, and that is just what it is.

I want to address just one phase of it, and that is the National Health Institutes. I think in a big bill, with a lot of money involved, it is easy to recite across-the-board cuts or reductions here and reductions there. But we have a responsibility where we make our reductions. There are several areas in which we spend money to save money, and this is one of them, at the National Health Institutes.

Chairman NATCHER also spoke of a hearing that we had, a hearing of several hours, with numerous Nobel laureates, distinguished people in their professions. Let me identify who some of them were: Dr. Renato Dulbecco, Nobel laureate; Dr. Mahlon Hoagland, president and scientific director of the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology in Shrewsbury, MA; Dr. George Palade, Nobel laureate; Dr. Hamilton O. Smith, Nobel laureate; Dr. Torsten Wiesel, Nobel laureate; and several others.

And this hearing went for several hours. This is the testimony of that hearing, and I just want to speak to a few of the points. We in Government are here to have foresight, not to have hindsight. Let me tell you what these people told us.

They said to Chairman NATCHER: "Mr. Chairman, I must now turn to the sad truth that all is far from well. I know that you and your committee members are aware of the many national and international indicators that show our country to be falling behind as a front-running international force in pure and applied science."

Consider a few points. And these are the things that should be considered by the people who are going to try to reduce the National Health Institutes.

One, West Germany and Japan have the highest percentage of GNP devoted to national civilian R&D expenditures. West Germany's ratio has reached 2.5 percent, and Japan's is 2.3 percent, compared to the ratio of the United States which is 1.7 percent.

Two, during the period of 1979 to 1981, 49 percent of all U.S. patents granted in the field of drugs and medicine were awarded to foreign inventors.

Three, Japan and West Germany have increased their investment in civilian R&D more rapidly than their economic growth rate.

Four, in 1981, the number of scientists and engineers engaged in R&D in the United States was 740,000. This is estimated to be only one-half of the total number of scientists and engineers engaged in R&D in the U.S.S.R.

Five, the Japanese Government has targeted biotechnology as a key technology of the future.

Six, the current patent of U.S. Government funding for basic and generic applied research and biotechnology in the United States may compromise the United States competitive position in the commercialization of biotechnology.

It is going to be suggested that there should be reductions in this account. Mr. Chairman, I say to you that there should be considerable increases over what we have here.

Let us look at what these Nobel laureates tell us. In this particular bill, with the funding, only about 3 of 10 research grant applications to NIH that are approved by the peer review process can be funded. That is right: We are going to fund just 3 out of 10. Twenty years ago, 19 out of every 20 approved applications were funded.

They also tell us that between 1972 and 1981 the support for applied research and development in academia was six times greater than the support for basic research.

In 1960, they tell us, the annual average growth rate in academic research and development expenditures was 12 percent. It declined to 2.8 percent in 1970.

Let us look at some of the breakthroughs if we want to apply not to the compassionate part of it but to the dollars and cents part of it. What we have done in medical science in the last few years, we have reduced the death rate from stroke by 46 percent. Let us not consider the 122,000 lives that that saved, but what it did; it saved us $5.2 billion.

It is going to be suggested that some people are going to try to reduce that.

Medical science has reduced the death rate from coronary heart disease by 30 percent. Never mind the 148,000 lives it saved; it saved us $7.7 billion.

What have we done with our investment in medical science through NIH? For all of those people who say, "Let the private sector get involved," what it has done, it has spawned more than 100 new companies in the emerging biotechnology industry, creating $1 billion in private-sector investment in 1983. It has contributed over $40 billion to our GNP each year from non-health-related products, more than the total of the Federal Government investment in basic research over nearly the last 50 years.

Through Chairman NATCHER, I would like to say that many people can suggest that there is a lot of money in this bill. If there is an area in which we spend money to save money, it is in the National Health Institutes. In my opinion, we are not spending nearly enough. And I think some Members are going to come in here and suggest very broad amendments that are just going to include everyone.

You know, it is nice to go back to the district and say that you are the chairman of the diabetes drive or the chairman of the leukemia drive or you are concerned about cancer. The United States is falling behind Japan and Germany and other countries. We owe it to the people of the United States to make sure we do not fall behind. We cannot let, in basic biomedical research, happen to us what has happened in the automobile business and computer chip business and everything else. It is what we do here which will determine if we will continue to be the leader in this particular area.

I urge the Members of this House, before they accept cuts, look to see if they are responsible cuts.

Chairman NATCHER, Mr. CONTE, and the members of this committee are extremely frugal. They spend the taxpayers' money like it is their own money. There is nothing in this particular bill, especially in this section, that is excessive. If anything, if we are going to stay competitive, you have to spend the money.

I urge the Members to support the people's bill.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EARLY. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding, and I want to associate myself with his remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say, as the junior member of the subcommittee, that, as everybody on the committee knows, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EARLY] takes more time with respect to this critical area of the budget than any other member of the subcommittee and of the Congress of the United States. The gentleman is more knowledgeable with respect to the impact of expenditures in this area and the problems which they seek to overcome than any other member of the subcommittee. On behalf of my constituents—and NIH is not in my district, of course—who benefit from the work that is done at NIH and from the research work that is done around the country, I thank the gentleman for the commitment that he has shown, the leadership that he has shown, and the tenacity that he has shown in this critical area of this budget. I congratulate the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. EARLY. I want to thank the gentleman for his comments. I just want to repeat that I am just delighted and honored to serve under Mr. NATCHER and the minority leader, Mr. CONTE. It is one of the more responsible committees in this House, and it is the peoples' committee.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, like a number of other commentators on this bill, I would like to begin by paying tribute to the distinguished gentleman who put it together. I do so primarily because my remarks about the bill will be critical.

One can never criticize a Natcher bill without some apprehension, because the gentleman from Kentucky is such a splendid legislator and takes such infinite pains with the production of the bill that those who are obliged to raise objections to the amounts of money being spent have to be very careful about how they do it.

I, myself, have gone to the distinguished subcommittee chairman and asked him for funds that were not in the President's budget, that I thought were useful. While I have been before his subcommittee, I have noticed the great sensitivity, the very careful attention that he gives to witnesses and indeed the gentlemanly courtesy which is accorded to people who testify before his committee.

His treatment is given to everybody, not just to Members of Congress like myself. Just as I cannot say enough good things about the chairman, so I have previously showered praise on my mentor, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. He is the greatest.

That said, Mr. Chairman, one must come to grips with the numbers in the bill. As closely as I can figure, it calls for spending of somewhere around $96.1 billion. Lurking over the Senate is another nearly $8 billion of unauthorized and unappropriated money which is going to be accepted in the conference. Following behind that, is another half a billion for the math and science. Heaven knows how many further supplementals are lurking in the more distant future.

If one simply takes the unappropriated stuff that the Senate will put in, we are then talking about $104 billion. If we compare that against 1984's actual continuing resolution, it is an enormous increase. If we take 1984 plus supplementals to date, we are still talking about a 5-percent increase actually about 4.8 percent. Now 5 percent is much more than we promised ourselves we would spend. You will recall we made a 3.5-percent commitment in our budget resolution.

Now, that is not the worst of it. When we separate out discretionary programs in this budget, including those items over in the Senate, we get ourselves down to some $33.1 billions of spending. Of this amount, this bill includes about $25.2 billion.

That is a 10.5-percent increase over the numbers in the 1984 continuing resolution bill.

So, we are not talking about a 3.5-percent increase, we are not talking about a 5-percent increase. For these discretionary items we are talking about a 10.5-percent increase. If we assume that the Senate nearly $8 billion figure is added as is, we are talking about a little more than an 8-percent increase.

Mr. Chairman, that is not what we said we were going to do when we passed the House budget. I am going to quote from Chairman JONES of the Budget Committee on April 4, in describing his bill, which a majority of the Members of this House voted for. He said on page 7778 of the RECORD:

> The committee bill provides 3.5 percent real growth in safety net programs and holds all other programs to 3.5 percent nominal growth, which is two-thirds of the rate of inflation, certainly less than inflation.

So what happened to the 3.5 percent? It became overall 5 percent in discretionary accounts it swelled to 10 percent. I think this bill is too expensive for approval in this House.

If the bill is not substantially amended. I recommend a negative vote solely because it exceeds the standard we set for ourselves.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, we have no additional requests for time on this side.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'BRIEN].

Mr. O'BRIEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, all that needs to be said has been said. I compliment Chairman NATCHER and ranking member CONTE for handling with extraordinary skill a very difficult bill. On balance, I think we have done a good job here. I suspect other Members of this House, if placed in our position, would find it difficult to come out with a better result.

I cannot pass the moment by, however, without commenting on how we handle these types of appropriations compared with other types, keeping in mind the spectre of the huge deficit looming up behind us. This is important appropriating; this is significant for all the people of the United States. But some weeks ago, an appropriation was considered where we declined to eliminate the expenses going toward providing, individual operators for automatic elevators. Has we taken the lead there, as Mr. PURSELL and I discussed among ourselves, to set those jobs aside for handicapped persons, such funding could be defended. It seems to me we must protect this type of appropriation and eliminate the luxury types that we do not need. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, one of the interesting aspects of this bill is that continually, particularly in this Presidential election year, we hear the statements made, it is Reagan's deficit, Reagan is responsible for the $160, $170 billion deficit. This bill points up again what Mr. WHITTEN, our distinguished Appropriations chairman eloquently stated in his remarks just a few minutes ago. That is Presidents propose spending levels and Congress disposes. In this instance, the President has requested $3.7 billion less than what the spending level of this bill proposes to authorize. In other words, the President makes a request, Congress considers it, and we have a bill before us that a lot of speakers here this morning have praised and is $3.7 billion higher than what the President's request is.

It may be presumptuous of us, for any of us, to say on the floor of this House that we speak for any special interest group. But I know when my colleague, Mr. CONTE, and other members were speaking on behalf of this bill, more than one of them made reference to the hundreds of witnesses that have come and testified on behalf of this legislation attesting the need. To those witnesses I have only one question in those crowded hearing rooms: Will anybody in the crowded hearing room who is not a beneficiary of this program or not owing his or her living to administering the benefits that will be flowing from this program please stand up?

I would submit that not one person in those hearing rooms would stand up. Well, there are 106 million American taxpayers, working today to pay the taxes so that we can have the funds to redistribute in this forum for all these needs. I think it is appropriate for someone to suggest that there is somebody in this Chamber speaking for the 106 million men and women of America who are working today in order to pay the taxes so that the people in this Chamber can redistribute the money to these people who ostensibly have this need.

This bill is too expensive; I hope we can reduce it, at least to the President's request. If we cannot do that, we should reject it.

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. Chairman, this is a responsible bill, appropriating $96.1 billion for the three departments—this total is $4.7 billion more than administration's request, but $1.7 billion less than fiscal year 1984 appropriation.

Within the Health and Human Services Department, the appropriation of $4.8 billion for NIH is vital. NIH located right here on the outskirts of Washington is often considered the premier biomedical research institution in the world. Funding will support the ongoing and acclaimed work of 11 existing national research institutes. Their work in the prevention and treatment of disease has yielded major breakthroughs in such illnesses as arthritis, coronary disease, and that devastating disease: Cancer.

The bill appropriates $1.08 billion alone for the support of the National Cancer Institute [NCI]—an unparalleled venture in the forefront of national efforts to combat this disease.

In 1981, our Nation made a commitment to fight cancer, and we have. We made that commitment because we became increasingly aware that cancer was an enormous drain on our resources, both human and economic.

Cancer will hit three out of four American families. In one year, the hospital and medical costs of cancer are over $9 billion. If you or I were to discover that we had fatal cancer, it would cost us $20,000 to die.

I believe we owe our constituents the most careful consideration of how we spend their money. I have long weighed the relative cost-benefit of our expenditures in biomedical research, and I have come to the firm conclusion that this money is well spent, it is an investment in preventing disease before it strikes, and is vitally needed in carrying on the research momentum.

Cancer is a devastating disease, a disease we all associate with painful and difficult treatment. We may have it within our power to help NIH and the NCI and those involved in clinical research and in treatment to change this reality. We may be able to beat many of the diseases associated with cancer as well as other diseases. We cannot do it without making the capital investment this bill provides.●

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I commend you for the fine job you have done on this bill. However, as former chairman and ranking member of the Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation Subcommittee, I am very disappointed to find that the Committee on Appropriations has not increased the funding for title IV, part B.

Title IV, parts B and E, fund Public Law 96-272, the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act of 1980. In 1980 when the Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation Subcommittee approved the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act, legislation which was urgently needed to reform our foster care and child welfare system, it assumed that $266 million was necessary to properly implement the law. Instead of $266 million, the Appropriations Committee has decided to continue to grossly underfund title IV, part B, at $165 million.

Mr. Chairman, while it is true that simply throwing money at a problem will not solve it, the lack of adequate funding for child welfare services has meant the difference between life, abuse, and even death for too many children in our country. This was the major conclusion of over two dozen witnesses at hearings held in California and Connecticut this year.

The horror stories we heard about children who were seriously abused, neglected, disturbed, and damaged made me sick. Even worse was the finding that these victims grow up to be victimizers. Without preventive services funded under title IV, part B, our juvenile and prison systems are swelling. In our prison population, 70 to 80 percent of the sexual offenders have been childhood victims of sexual abuse or trauma. In California, 33 percent of children at the California Youth Authority have been in foster care, while 69 percent of the inmates in the prison system were foster children.

Because there are not adequate funds to provide the preventive services for children and families in crisis, more children are coming into foster care with more serious problems requiring more services.

Mr. Chairman, you can't put out a forest fire with a squirt bottle and you can't make very damaged children healthy with underfunded and understaffed programs.

Social scientists have long theorized that if, for one generation of children, the abuse and poverty cycle could be broken and a nurturing atmosphere substituted, we would be well on our way toward solving some of the world's biggest problems. We have this opportunity for at least the 600,000 foster children in the United States today. There is no greater injustice than for society to accept or demand custody of abused, abandoned, neglected, handicapped, and dependent children only to continue that neglect and abuse.

The Senate has voted to increase title IV, part B, funds by $35 million. I hope that the House conferees would recede to the Senate and accept this small but vitally important increase to save lives and help rebuild a future for our most precious resource—our children.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my support for the bill before us which will provide funds for programs within the Departments of Health and Human Services and Labor for fiscal year 1985.

I believe this bill before us merits our strong support for it provides funding for some of the most important programs which assist those in our society who depend upon the Federal Government to help them help themselves. Specifically, H.R. 6028 provides a total of $96.1 billion which is $3.7 billion above the administration's requests and $1.7 billion below fiscal year 1984 actual spending. This decrease below last year's levels is a result of failure to provide funding for four important programs which have not yet been reauthorized during this session: the Low-Income Energy Assistance Block Grant, the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant, and the Primary Care Block Grant, and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Block Grant. Final action on these reauthorization bills are expected in the near future and I have full confidence that the chairman will act to also provide appropriate funding for these important programs as well.

With respect to the Department of Labor, a number of important programs important to New York will be funded. As New York State senior member of the House Education and Labor Committee, I have joined with my colleagues to assure that these programs, which assist us in our national training and employment effort, are continued in a timely and efficient fashion. Specifically, for the Job Training Partnership Act [JTPA], a total of $3.724 billion is provided, of which $215.9 million will be allocated to New York. This program, the replacement to CETA, establishes a national public/private partnership with business and industry to train and retrain disadvantaged workers. Of this $215 million, $123.5 million is provided for the Disadvantaged Youth Program under title II-A, $57.5 million for summer youth programs under II-B, $10.4 million for dislocated workers under III, $1.9 million for Native Americans under IV, $1.4 million for migrants and farmworkers, $22.9 million for the Job Corps, $475,000 for veterans programs and a national total of $58.3 million for national activities.

I am especially pleased that the committee has responded in a generous—and appropriate fashion to address the need to provide added funding for State activities with respect to the Occupational Safety and Health Act. The $1.9 million in this bill will allow for an equal match of State funds in order to assist in the implementation of the OSHA State plan to 1 million of New York's public employees. This plan was originally funded in last year's bill as well, as this action by the committee will assure that the intent of Congress, in passing OSHA, will be carried out in full and that safety and health of our workers will not be compromised.

Funding for the Senior Community Service Employment Program under title V of the Older Americans Act has been deferred pending final congressional action on H.R. 4785, the reauthorization of the act, by Congress. I anticipate that this bill, of which I am an original cosponsor, will be acted upon shortly by the House, at which time, this program will be extended for an additional 3 years. The program is currently funded at $317.3 million which supports 62,500 jobs nationwide and it is my hope that the committee will provide the necessary funds in order to assure that these jobs are retained over the coming fiscal year.

This bill also provides $425.4 million for the Child Support Enforcement Program which supports State programs to collect child support payments from absent parents in order to reduce Federal and State AFDC costs. This is in addition to the $138 million in advance appropriations which were provided last year in anticipation of congressional approval of the Child Support Enforcement Amendments of 1983, which is expected to be signed into law in the near future. For the first time since the program was established, we have, with the passage of H.R. 4325, taken a forceful step to address the pressing problem of nonpayment of child support and the funding provided in this bill will allow us to continue these important activities.

With respect to the education programs authorized under this bill, I am pleased that the committee has provided $3.69 billion for title I education programs and $678.9 million for the chapter 11 block grant. These funds remain the core of our Federal support to education programs to assist the disadvantaged as well as support for innovative programs within States under the block grant.

For higher education, a total of $3.046 billion is provided for the Guaranteed Student Loan Program of which $447.8 million will flow to New York State students and their families. The Pell Grant Program is increased to $3.4 billion from the current $2.8 billion which will allow increased educational opportunities to disadvantaged students, securing a floor of support to assure that they retain full access to educational opportunities in both the public and the private sectors.

I am especially pleased that this bill has provided a substantial increase in the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant [SEOG] Program at $425 million which assures that States, like New York, receive their fair share of educational dollars. With these funds, New York State can expect to receive an additional $45 million which will support increased educational opportunity particularly in the private sector.

This increase is a result of changes in the Higher Education Act which was amended in 1980 in a joint effort by myself and Senator Jacob Javits in response to concerns that States, such as my own State of New York, which provides a substantial effort in State funds, are in turn, penalized by receiving less than their fair share of Federal dollars. This is the first time since passage of the 1980 amendments to the act that this revised formula is able to take effect and I am grateful to the committee for their recognition of increased funds for this critical educational program.

I also wish, at this point, to pay tribute to the individual who was responsible for the adoption of this amendment, Hank Paley, who passed away suddenly this past May. Hank, as president of the Commission on Independent Colleges and Universities in the State of New York, was instrumental in the adoption of this amendment and worked closely with myself and Senator Javits to assure its adoption. While his untimely death was a shock to higher education, not only in New York, but across the Nation, I believe that this increase in funds is a fitting tribute to his hard work and dedication on behalf of New York, its students and its independent colleges and universities.

Mr. Chairman, on the whole, I believe that this bill is a most favorable response to the needs of millions of Americans who rely on critical social service programs for their survival for health, education, and training opportunities. I wish to pay special tribute to Chairman NATCHER, for his continued diligence in producing a product which merits our strong, bipartisan support. I join with my colleagues to urge support for H.R. 6028.●

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 6028 is a quality piece of legislation which enhances the level of our investment in the well-being of this country. Let me focus for a moment on several of the public health and disease prevention aspects of this bill.

First of all, our bill rejects the administration's status quo approach to public health by adding $567 million. For the Centers for Disease Control [CDC], we provide an additional $19.8 million over the budget request in order to respond rapidly to public health emergencies and disease control and prevention activities. We have added $3.35 million and eight positions over the budget request for acquired immune deficiency syndrome [AIDS], providing a total of $15.35 million for AIDS activities in fiscal year 1985. With this increase, the CDC will be able to improve laboratory diagnosis of retroviruses, determine the prevalence of retrovirus antibody and viremia in various populations including lymph node syndrome cases and carry out basic studies for vaccine development. Further, this increase will allow CDC to expand investigation of transfusion-associated cases and donors, including pediatric cases.

We include in our AIDS recommendation an additional $300,000 to expand the public education program by involving community-based AIDS education groups and the National Hemophilia Foundation.

Further, we are instituting a new procedure which requires CDC to inform our committee promptly when it anticipates any major diversion of program resources in response to a public health crisis such as with AIDS.

Our recommendation also includes an additional $1.5 million for the diabetes control program which has resulted in significant cost reductions in hospital stays. This increase will help to expand patient and physician education activities especially among high-risk populations.

For the National Institutes of Health, our committee has added $505.3 million over the budget request; and for the National Institute of Mental Health, $50 million over that request. Within those increases, our committee recommended several important public health initiatives. These include—

Expanded support for AIDS research in blood testing, HTLV-III production, vaccine development, monocyte abnormalities and immune abnormalities; collaborative therapy trials of AIDS using standard protocols; clinical study related to treatment and prevention of AIDS; and epidemiological studies including possible HTLV-III infections in health care workers.

A reporting requirement with a September 1 deadline identifying by Institute the additional funding needed to respond to the recent AIDS discoveries, together with a description of activities to be conducted in fiscal year 1985.

Significant enhancement of research on Alzheimer's disease and related disorders with an additional $5 million to fund five more research centers of excellence, bringing the total centers program to $8.5 million; a provision requiring a rate of growth no less than that provided in fiscal year 1984 for the research grants program; and a new research initiative in NIMH to focus on family stress problems related to the care of victims of this disease. These initiatives should raise the funding level for Alzheimer's disease research in fiscal year 1985 to over $50 million.

Initiation of a collaborative research program focused on learning disabilities, designed to develop interventions that will help learning disabled children and their families cope successfully with their disabilities. This program would involve the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Institutes of Health, and the Department of Education.

Significant expansion of mental health research and services demonstration, providing more than $23.5 million over fiscal year 1984; restoration of support for clinical training; funding for a family stress program on Alzheimer's disease; and additional support for clinical research on child and geriatric mental health.

Support for accelerated vaccine development including the funding of high-priority clinical trials related to vaccine development.

Expansion of research in geriatrics with a $25.8 million increase over the budget request for the National Institute on Aging. Included in that increase is the additional $5 million for the Alzheimer's centers program; $2.8 million to carry out the geriatric training initiative designed to ameliorate the current critical shortage of medical and health personnel trained in aging issues; restoration of funding for the systolic hypertension clinical trial; and expansion of project grant awards.

In addition to these initiatives which I strongly recommended as a necessary part of our public health investment, I sponsored language requiring NIH to evaluate its pattern of funding for clinical research among all the Institutes, including the National Cancer Institute. This comprehensive review will enable our committee to determine the impact of policy decisions on the funding of clinical research which provides the vital link between basic research and the delivery of appropriate care to the patient. Related to this is the issue of adequacy of our support for clinical research training. It is critically important that our funding decisions assure the flow of young clinical investigators into the field of biomedical research.

Our committee also recommended educational increases which deserve the support of the House in chapter I assistance to disadvantaged children, chapter II, bilingual education, libraries, financial assistance to students and higher education discretionary programs, including several aimed at assisting financially disadvantaged students.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill and to oppose any effort to reduce the level of commitment recommended in this outstanding piece of legislation.●

● Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, the Department of Labor has repeatedly come to the Congress over the last 3 years asking that major staff increases be provided to the Labor Management Services Administration for a new compliance audit program. The Congress wisely cut back those requests in each of the last 3 years but none the less nearly 100 new positions were added for the program.

A recent report by the Inspector General of the Department indicates that continued use of these positions for the program is of very questionable utilty.

The report states that the increases were requested by the Department "even though there has been no validation of the need for or the effectiveness of the program."

The intention of the program is to: To uncover section 501 (c) (Taft-Hartley Act) violations (embezzlements) and other criminal and civil violations of the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act; to create a visable enforcement presence in the Labor Community; and to provide effective grass roots technical assistance directly to union officials.

The IG found that "CAP [compliance audit program] has not achieved its objectives. It has not been successful in uncovering criminal activity, resolving many civil violations, or meeting its enforcement presence or technical assistance goals."

The IG review of CAP audits showed a success rate of less than 1 percent and that many of the cases claimed as successes by CAP were not really attributable to the efforts of the program.

The IG concluded that the "added staff directed to the CAP has not produced satisfactory results and recommend that the more traditional methods of identifying and prosecuting union corruption appear to be far more effective."

Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee denied the Department all of the new positions requested for this program in the coming year. While the existing positions are still in the Bill, I think I can speak for the committee in saying that we are going to be looking very carefully at the way that the existing positions within LMSA are used in the coming year before deciding on next year's Budget.

It is apparent to me that a significant reallocation of positions out of the CAP program and into the more effective efforts of finding and convicting offenders is necessary if we really want to get the most bang for our buck. The Department has been given the latitude to make such a reallocation during the coming fiscal year but may well find its options more narrowly defined in the fiscal 1986 appropriation if that latitude is not used wisely during fiscal 1985.●

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in favor of H.R. 6028, the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies appropriation bill for 1985. I am particularly pleased at appropriated levels for programs under the jurisdiction of the Department of Education—a $2.47 billion increase over last year's funding. For the past 4 years we have allowed education programs to languish and students of every age across this country to suffer. We have ignored the very clear and certain fact that education is the key to our standard of living in the future, to our success in every aspect of life, and the singular most important factor in guaranteeing the security of our country. My distinguished colleague, Mr. NATCHER, the chairman of the Labor, Health and Human Services Subcommittee is to be commended for his sensitivity to the importance of these programs and his efforts to once again treat educational programs as the priority they should be.

In fiscal year 1980, the elementary and secondary education programs received an appropriation of $7.393 billion. If we had inflated those figures according to the inflation rates for the last 4 years, they would now be receiving $10.027 billion and overall the education budget would be $19.943 billion.

A recent statewide poll in my home State of Michigan showed that residents of that State believe that the Federal Government should be increasing its support for education. Unfortunately, through the policies of the Reagan administration, the Federal Government has not held up its end in supporting education. During the 1979-80 school year, the Federal share of the costs of elementary and secondary education was 9.2 percent. In the current school year, the Federal share is only 6.4 percent—a decrease in Federal support for our schools of 30 percent in 4 years. As a result States are not only being asked to do their share but also to makeup for a diminished Federal effort. Very often they cannot do it. The final losers are the students.

I believe that one of the highest priorities for the Federal Government in the years ahead is to once again become a strong partner in support of education. H.R. 6028 is a step in that direction and deserves our support and vote.●

● Mr. LEVINE of California. I rise in strong support of the Labor-HHS-Education appropriations for fiscal year 1985. I would like to commend the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. WHITTEN, and the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. NATCHER, for their leadership and their work on behalf of this legislation. I would like to extend a particular thank you to my colleague from California, Mr. ROYBAL, for his assistance in introducing language into the committee report which would require the National Institute for Handicapped Research to give consideration to funding a national center for the partially sighted.

The need for a comprehensive rehabilitative center which provides low-vision care and a broad range of rehabilitative care has been amply demonstrated. Invaluable assistance would be provided to the more than 2 million partially sighted individuals in the country, along with the researchers and technical support staff who provide assistance.

A national center for the partially sighted will also serve as a clearinghouse for the collection and dissemination of referral information, patient data, and assessments of the special needs of and optimal rehabilitative techniques for the partially sighted. Thus, a comprehensive center would encompass the broad range of patient needs that the low-vision clinics and private practitioners are not able to offer.

Partially sighted individuals would for the first time, be provided with the kind of cost-effective services they desperately need. The cost of treating partially sighted persons, as persons with valuable remaining eyesight, is far less than that of treating them as if they were totally blind.

At this time there are only seven comprehensive low-vision rehabilitation centers in the Nation, three that serve partially sighted persons of all ages and four that confine their assistance to veterans. These centers deal strictly with low-vision problems. They are not rehabilitative in the comprehensive sense, which is why there is a need for a national information, referral, and training center.

A comprehensive center differs from low-vision clinics and from the private practice of optometrists and ophthalmologists. This distinction occurs because in addition to low-vision care, a comprehensive center would offer services that assist patients to better handle psychological problems, move about alone and safely, find educational, vocational, recreational and social opportunities, and locate and receive economic assistance when it is needed.

In order to reduce the necessity of dependency on scarce tax dollars, qualified individuals and organizations that desired to establish and operate low-vision facilities would be provided with technical assistance emphasizing the acquisition of support from the private sector.

In closing, I would once again like to say how pleased I am that the committee sees the critical need for a comprehensive rehabilitative center on low-vision care. I look forward to working with the committee to make such a center a reality.●

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I rise to express my support for the funding provided in H.R. 6028 for the research programs of the National Institute on Drug Abuse [NIDA].

The bill includes $63,513,000 for drug abuse research in 1985, the same amount requested in the President's budget. This level represents an increase of about $8.9 million or 16 percent over 1984 funding. This will allow NIDA to support an estimated 385 extramural research projects, 45 more than last year. The bill also includes $14.9 million, as requested, for NIDA's administrative costs and program support.

The basic and applied research NIDA conducts is essential to expanding our knowledge of the biological and behavioral mechanisms of drug abuse. In recent years, NIDA research has led to significant advances in understanding where and how drugs work in the brain. Drug abuse research is also critical to the development of new treatment, prevention and diagnostic approaches for the identification and care of drug abusers and the prevention of drug abuse. NIDA research programs also monitor the nature and extent of drug abuse in America and changing drug abuse patterns.

I am pleased the Appropriations Committee report recognizes the need for improved national data collection on drug abuse, treatment capacity, and utilization of treatment services. The select committee has been deeply concerned by the loss of data brought about by the shift to block grant funding for drug abuse services in 1982. Without a uniform national drug abuse data system, we cannot assess changing drug abuse trends accurately or allocate our scarce resources effectively. Clearly, Federal assistance is needed to establish such a national data collection system. The committee's report directs that a portion of the 1985 increase be allocated toward establishing a comprehensive data collection system.

While I support the increases provided for NIDA research in H.R. 6028, I believe a stronger Federal commitment to drug abuse research is needed. Budget cuts in 1981 and 1982 cut deeply into NIDA's important research activities, especially in the areas of prevention and treatment assessment and epidemiology. Increases in subsequent years have helped to restore some of NIDA's research program. But the number of extramural research projects NIDA can support is still well below the 423 projects supported in 1980. Establishment of a comprehensive drug abuse data system will also require additional resources. Nonetheless, the amount appropriated in H.R. 6028 will help NIDA continue to strengthen its research programs, and I urge all Members to support the funding level in the bill.●

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NATCHER. I have no further requests for time, Mr. Chairman, and we yield back the balance of our time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6028

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ADMINISTRATION

PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION

For expenses of administering employment and training programs, $69,619,000, together with not to exceed $45,200,000 which may be expended from the Employment Security Administration account in the Unemployment Trust Fund.

TRAINING AND EMPLOYMENT SERVICES

For expenses necessary to carry into effect the Job Training Partnership Act, including the purchase and hire of passenger motor vehicles, the construction, alteration, and repair of buildings and other facilities, and the purchase of real property for training centers as authorized by the Job Training Partnership Act, $3,723,079,000 plus reimbursements, to be available for obligation for the period July 1, 1985, through June 30, 1986, including $2,000,000 for the National Commission for Employment Policy, including $3,000,000 for all activities conducted by and through the National Occupational Information Coordinating Committee under the Job Training Partnership Act, and including $10,000,000 for service delivery areas under section 101(a)(4)(A)(iii) of the Job Training Partnership Act in addition to amounts otherwise provided under sections 202 and 251(b) of the Act: Provided, That no funds from any other appropriation shall be used to provide meal services at or for Job Corps centers: Provided further, That the amount appropriated under this paragraph for the summer youth employment and training program shall be allocated to States so that each service delivery area receives, as nearly as possible, an amount equal to its prior year allocation for this program.

For the summer youth employment and training program authorized by the Job Training Partnership Act, $100,000,000, in addition to amounts otherwise provided herein for these purposes, to be allocated to States so that each service delivery area receives, as nearly as possible, an amount equal to its prior year allocation for this program, to be available for obligation for the period July 1, 1984, through June 30, 1985.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. None of the funds appropriated by the title for grants-in-aid of State agencies to cover, in whole or in part, the cost of operation of said agencies, including the salaries and expenses of officers and employees of said agencies, shall be withheld from the said agencies of any State which have established by legislative enactment and have in operation a merit system and classification and compensation plan covering the selection, tenure in office, and compensation of their employees, because of any disapproval of their personnel or the manner of their selection by the agencies of the said States, or the rates of pay of said officers or employees.

SEC. 302. Funds appropriated in this Act to the American Printing House for the Blind, Howard University, the National Technical Institute for the Deaf, and Gallaudet College shall be subject to audit by the Secretary of Education.

SEC. 303. None of the funds provided herein shall be used to pay any recipient of a grant for the conduct of research an amount equal to as much as the entire cost of such research.

SEC. 304. No part of the funds contained in this title may be used to force any school or school district which is desegregated as that term is defined in title IV of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Public Law 88-352, to take any action to force the busing of students; to force on account of race, creed or color the abolishment of any school so desegregated; or to force the transfer or assignment of any student attending any elementary or secondary school so desegregated to or from a particular school over the protest of his or her parents or parent.

SEC. 305. (a) No part of the funds contained in this title shall be used to force any school or school district which is desegregated as that term is defined in title IV of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Public Law 88-352, to take any action to force the busing of students; to require the abolishment of any school so desegregated; or to force on account of race, creed or color the transfer of students to or from a particular school so desegregated as a condition precedent to obtaining Federal funds otherwise available to any State, school district or school.

(b) No funds appropriated in this Act may be used for the transportation of students or teachers (or for the purchase of equipment for such transportation) in order to overcome racial imbalance in any school or school system, or for the transportation of students or teachers (or for the purchase of equipment for such transportation) in order to carry out a plan of racial desegregation of any school or school system.

SEC. 306. None of the funds contained in this Act shall be used to require, directly or indirectly, the transportation of any student to a school other than the school which is nearest the student's home, except for a student requiring special education, to the school offering such special education, in order to comply with title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. For the purpose of this section an indirect requirement of transportation of students includes the transportation of students to carry out a plan involving the reorganization of the grade structure of schools, the pairing of schools, or the clustering of schools, or any combination of grade restructuring, pairing or clustering. The prohibition described in this section does not include the establishment of magnet schools.

SEC. 307. No funds appropriated under this Act may be used to prevent the implementation of programs of voluntary prayer and meditation in the public schools.

SEC. 308. Section 402(c) of the Housing Act of 1950 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (8);

(2) by redesignating clause (9) as clause (10); and

(3) by inserting after clause (8) the following:

"(9) for the prepayment in full of a loan under this title, provide a discount in an amount determined by the Secretary to be in the best financial interests of the Government, taking into account the yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States having maturities comparable to the remaining term of such loan, if (A) the prepayment is made from non-Federal sources, (B) the Secretary has received satisfactory assurances that the housing or other educational facilities financed with the loan will continue to be used for purposes related to the educational institution for the original term of the loan, (C) the prepayment is made prior to October 1, 1985; and".

SEC. 309. No funds appropriated in any Act to the Department of Education for fiscal years 1984 and 1985 shall be withheld from distribution to grantees because of the provisions of the order entered by the United States District Court for Northern District of Illinois on June 30, 1983: Provided, That the court's decree entered on September 24, 1980, shall remain in full force and effect.

This title may be cited as the "Department of Education Appropriation Act, 1985".

Appropriations contained in this Act, available for salaries and expenses, shall be available for expenses of attendance at meetings which are concerned with the functions or activities for which the appropriation is made or which will contribute to improved conduct, supervision, or management of those functions or activities.

SEC. 506. No part of the funds appropriated under this Act shall be used to provide a loan, guarantee of a loan, a grant, the salary of or any remuneration whatever to any individual applying for admission, attending, employed by, teaching at, or doing research at an institution of higher education who has engaged in conduct on or after August 1, 1969, which involves the use of (or the assistance to others in the use of) force or the threat of force or the seizure of property under the control of an institution of higher education, to require or prevent the availability of certain curricula, or to prevent the faculty, administrative officials, or students in such institution from engaging in their duties or pursuing their studies at such institution.

SEC. 507. The Secretaries of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education are authorized to transfer unexpended balances of prior appropriations to accounts corresponding to current appropriations provided in this Act: Provided, That such transferred balances are used for the same purpose, and for the same periods of time, for which they were originally appropriated.

SEC. 508. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 509. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be used, other than for normal and recognized executive-legislative relationships, for publicity or propaganda purposes, for the preparation, distribution, or use of any kit, pamphlet, booklet, publication, radio, television, or film presentation designed to support or defeat legislation pending before the Congress, except in presentation to the Congress itself.

No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be used to pay the salary or expenses of any grant or contract recipient, or agent acting for such recipient, related to any activity designed to influence legislation or appropriations pending before the Congress.

SEC. 510. The Secretaries of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education are each authorized to make available not to exceed $7,500 from funds available for salaries and expenses under titles I, II, and III, respectively, for official reception and representation expenses; the Director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service is authorized to make available for official reception and representation expenses not to exceed $2,500 from the funds available for "Salaries and expenses, Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service"; and the Chairman of the National Mediation Board is authorized to make available for official reception and representation expenses not to exceed $2,500 from funds available for "Salaries and expenses, National Mediation Board".

SEC. 511. None of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be used to pay for any research program or project or any program, project, or course which is of an experimental nature, or any other activity involving human participants, which is determined by the Secretary or a court of competent jurisdiction to present a danger to the physical, mental, or emotional well-being of a participant or subject of such program, project, or course, without the written, informed consent of each participant or subject, or a participant's parents or legal guardian, if such participant or subject is under eighteen years of age. The Secretary shall adopt appropriate regulations respecting this section.

SEC. 512. None of the funds provided in this Act to any department or agency may be expended for the transportation of any officer or employee of such department or agency between his domicile and his place of employment, with the exception of the Secretaries of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education who under title 5, United States Code, section 101 are exempted from such limitations.

This Act may be cited as the "Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1985".

Mr. NATCHER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against the bill?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto conclude no later than 1:30.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FRENZEL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, is the bill open to amendment at any point?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. Unanimous consent was granted for the bill to be open for amendment at any point.

Mr. FRENZEL. Did the Chair request protection for points of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked if there were any points of order, and no one raised any points of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. So the raising of a point of order at this point is untimely?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an untimely request.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. DANNEMEYER

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer 4 amendments and ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

The was no objection.

Mr. DANNEMEYER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, these amendments are considered en bloc, and I thank the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], for permission to offer these amendments en bloc. I think it will expedite the proceedings of the House.

These amendments reflect the sense of the recommendations of the Grace Commission, of which we have heard much in this body in the course of this calendar year, and I suspect we are going to hear more during the balance of the year and in the years to come.

Members will recall that the President appointed this Commission about 2 years ago, June 1982. It consisted of 161 executives from major business concerns of America. They volunteered their time to examine the entire funding programs of the U.S. Government. They utilized the work of over 2,000 volunteers. There was no taxpayers' money that was spent in this effort. They actually expended about $70-some million in producing the recommendations.

They published 47 reports containing 2,478 recommendations indentifying 780 specific issues where reductions in spending could take place.

This report, called the Grace Commission Report, after its chairman, Peter Grace, was filed last December and now is in the process of being considered by agencies of the executive branch to determine how many, if at all, will be implemented.

The sum total of the recommendations of the Grace Commission identified some $424 billion of reduction in Federal spending over a 3-year period. The Congressional Budget Office analyzed that and concluded, based on an analysis of less than all of them, that the savings would be closer to $98 billion, not $424 billion. Whatever the true figure is, time will tell, but it is somewhere between $98 billion and $424 billion.

We in this Chamber have the ability to reduce the deficit by that magnitude over the next 3 years if we have just one thing to do it; that is, the will to do it. One of the difficulties, of course, is when a Member of Congress, any of us, stands in the well and seeks to identify where we are going to cut money, the natural reaction for any Member of the House is to look at that proposed reduction and say, "How will that play in my district? Can I explain that to my constituents?" Politically, it is probably a difficult way to go about reducing the deficit. A more politically acceptable way would be an across-the-board cut of 5 percent or 10 percent, or a freeze, or a combination. To do it this way is difficult for the reasons I have stated. Nevertheless, I think it is a very responsible way to proceed.

All of the recommendations of the Grace Commission can be implemented in one of two ways: by legislative action; that is, where Congress, we, change the law; or by implementation of executive branch action. About 28 percent can be implemented by action of the Executive; about 72 percent require legislative change.

The amendment that is before us right now contains recommendations of the Grace Commission that relate to those which can be implemented by Executive action. We do not have to change the basic law to implement them, and they are contained in titles I, II, III, and IV. They are identified in the amendments that this Member from California has offered. They contain about 12 specific items totaling some $147.5 million.

I have at the desk, in case any Member is interested, a description of the Grace Commission recommendations and language. If Members want to read precisely how the savings can be achieved as identified in the Grace Commission report, Members can come to the desk and I will be happy to share this data with them. I have a very brief summary of what they do, and I will hope to read through them here to the extent that I have time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DANNEMEYER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Labor, special benefits, better monitoring and control of automated disability payment system.

Departmental management, develop objectives, productivity improvement.

HHS. Departmental management, operating divisions should direct and fund research, not Office of the Secretary. Operating divisions should also control evaluation, management and funding.

NIN. Establish a 5.5-percent ceiling on administrative costs of research grants.

SSA. Improve management control of work flow; simplify and condense program operating manuals.

SSI. Eliminate Federal fiscal liability payments to States for errors in SSI payments.

Education. Improve management information systems control to reduce error and fraud and student financial assistance programs.

These total $147.5 million out of a total appropriation bill of some $96 billion.

That is a relatively modest percentage cut of 0.15 percent.

I will, in closing, remind my colleagues that this bill is $3.7 billion higher than the President's request. I would rather have an amendment that would reduce that excess by $3.7 billion. If I offered it, I suspect I could not get the majority of the Members to support it. I believe sincerely that it is rational and fair to ask my colleagues to support this amendment reducing it by $147.5 million in order to implement the modest recommendations of the Grace Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for the Members' support.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. Chairman, during our hearings with the departments and agencies, we asked witness after witness as to whether or not they were carrying out the recommendations of the Grace Commission, and as to whether or not the recommendations of the Grace Commission had been considered at the time their respective budgets were complied and submitted to OMB. We were told that many of these recommendations were reflected in the budget.

For example, in part II of the hearings concerning the Department of Health and Human Services, Mr. Chairman, this subject appears on page 83. In part V of the hearings on the Office of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, it appears on page 1381. In part VI of the hearings for the Department of Education, our line of questioning and the answers appear on page 1393.

Mr. Chairman, our hearing record shows frequent references to the Grace Commission report.

The gentleman's amendment in many instances would make reductions that have already been made in the budget. The Departments and the agencies are following the Grace Commission report, according to the information available to us.

The reductions proposed by this amendment, Mr. Chairman, are not necessary and could disrupt the operations of the Department of Labor, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Department of Education. Many of the Grace Commission recommendations are now being studied by the agencies. Some of these require legislation which will have to go to the authorizing committee for approval.

Just to show the Members, Mr. Chairman, as to whether or not we were carefully considering the Grace Commission report, let me just cite one instance here as far as the Department of Education is concerned.

On page 1393 of our hearings:

Mr. NATCHER. In developing your budget request for salaries and expenses, did you follow any of the recommendations made by the Grace Commission?

Mr. HEATHERLY—

Testifying for the Department—

Yes, Mr. Chairman, we have built some of those recommendations into our 1985 budget request. Unfortunately, most of the dollar savings identified by the Grace Commission, by their own admission and statements, would require legislative changes in the programs. Those have been deferred pending final discussion with the Department of OMB and the White House on those recommendations.

Now, that is as far as Education is concerned.

As far as Health and Human Services, Mr. Chairman, when the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Mrs. Heckler, appeared before our committee, we directed a question to her concerning the Grace Commission recommendations.

On page 83:

Mr. NATCHER. We have heard a great deal about the recommendations of the Grace Commission. Which of the Commission's recommendations with respect to the Department of Health and Human Services do you plan to carry out?

Mr. Chairman, we went into detail with this fine lady and asked her, "What have you done about it? Have you considered it?" Her answer is quite extensive, and it is printed in our hearings.

That was during the hearings with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and we say to our friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER], that we carefully considered this matter all through the hearings. It was pointed out to us time after time, as I have just said, that the Commission report and many of their recommendations require legislative changes.

In addition to that, as I have just stated and as far as the Department of Labor is concerned, Mr. Chairman, when Secretary Donovan appeared before our committee, on page 47 of the hearings, we said to him:

Mr. Secretary, the Grace Commission made a number of recommendations concerning your Department. Can you tell us what steps, if any, the Department is taking to implement some of these major recommendations?

Mr. Chairman, I am trying to show that we very carefully went into detail with all of them on the Grace Commission report.

I say to the Members that acceptance of this amendment as proposed by the gentleman from California, would be a serious mistake. In marking up this bill, we carefully considered the Grace Commission report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. NATCHER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, we asked each of the withnesses, "Have you considered it?"

Let me say to the gentleman from California, that as far as the President of the United States is concerned and as far as the heads of the Departments of Government are concerned, I think they have been proceeding in good faith about this matter.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I want the Members to know that I appreciate the interest of the gentleman from California in the Grace Commission. I know of no Member of the House who has taken a greater interest in the Grace Commission and has spent more time analyzing the Grace Commission than my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER]. He watches this issue here on the floor of the House, on special orders, and on every bill.

We really could call him the "watchdog" of the House of Representatives in regard to wasteful spending and trying to do what he can to squeeze out any fat in any of these bills dealing with the budget as they have come before the House. he is my good friend, and I want to compliment him. His people in California are fortunate to have such a man carrying out this responsibility, because it is not a popular issue and it is a very arduous task.

I am interested in the Grace Commission as well. I have here a collection of materials that we collected during the hearings we had with each of the agencies on the Grace Commission. If you look at these responses, you will see that most of the cuts that are recommended here have already been addressed by the various Departments.

The Labor Department has already accepted four of the six specific recommendations made by the Grace Commission to improve the monitoring and the control of the disability payment system. Additionally, under the departmental management, the Department of Labor has already accepted all of the Grace Commission's recommendations.

In Health and Human Services, it has already worked to eliminate much of the organizational layering and the duplication in HHS. The NIH has agreed to establish an acceptable range for administration costs. The Social Security Administration is already working to simplify and condense operating manuals.

□ 1150

The Department of Education has already instituted over 85 percent of the Grace Commission recommendations. Most of that effort has centered on the tightening of controls on student financial assistance programs.

We have accepted in the funding recommendations in this bill the Grace Commission recommendation to decrease employment in Health and Human Services, Office of the Secretary, by 1,000 persons.

We cut the budget of the Office of Policy Research in Health and Human Services, as the Commission recommends.

Throughout this bill, we allow for some reductions in personnel as a result of management efficiencies to be instituted in those particular departments.

In addition, the agencies have all taken steps on their own to implement the Grace Commission recommendations; so therefore, I say we have addressed in this bill the areas that the gentleman's amendment is concerned with. The Agencies have done a good job. It is far from over. It is far from complete and we will continue to follow up on these issues. On that basis, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from California is defeated.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, it is very frustrating for Members to hear the President of the United States on television every couple weeks talking about the fact that we could save literally billions of dollars if we implement the savings in the Grace Commission report.

Now, I know every Member of Congress, whether they be Democratic or Republican, whether they be on the Appropriations Committee or on the Banking Committee or whatever committee, must feel that same frustration that I do today.

I would like to ask members of the committee who know more about the bill than I do, but who share the same frustration that I do, is it genuine, is it sincere if we tell the folks back home that in looking at these important areas of spending, that is, education and HHS, that we have in fact done all that we might do to implement the Grace Commission report?

Let me be as specific as I can and maybe the chairman, my friend, the gentleman from Kentucky, might respond on his personal feelings about the Grace Commission.

Specifically, Mr. Chairman, when I look at the Grace Commission savings, it is talking about $400 billion of savings, and I am a pretty good budget fellow myself, I can find about 10 percent of that real. Out of that $430 billion in savings, I, if I were King or President or head of the Budget Committee or could write the law myself, I could only save about $1 in $10. That would be $40 billion. That is a lot of money. That would help reduce the deficit. That would help small business in America and all the rest; but taking that same formula in this particular appropriation bill, I tried to look at the Grace Commission savings and have found a couple ways we might save some money.

I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to repeat, have we in the Congress of the United States done all in the gentleman's opinion that we can do to implement the reasonable Grace Commission savings visa-vis Education and HHS? Should we do more, and if so, what could be done?

I yield to the chairman.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman's question, I would say this. As I pointed out earlier, during the hearings, we inquired of the different agency heads and the Secretaries of the Departments as to what they were doing in regard to the Grace Commission report. We felt during all the hearings that it was important enough that we should do this.

I say to the gentleman from Louisiana that, no, I do not think enough has been done up to this time. I say that to the gentleman frankly.

We said to the Secretaries of these three Departments, "Have you structured your budget in such a way as to consider the Grace Commission report?"

As I pointed out a few moments ago, they said that in some instances legislative proposals would be in order.

In answer to the gentleman's question, and I appreciate the question the gentleman has propounded concerning this matter, no; not enough has been done. I think all the agency heads, and all the Secretaries throughout the Federal Government ought to consider carefully the Grace Commission report and structure their budgets accordingly, when it can be done, unless it takes legislative proposals to carry out the recommendations.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his answer. Following up on what the gentleman just said, does the gentleman believe that these administrative officers have done all they could to implement the Grace Commission report?

Specifically, I ask that question because administrative directives can do most of what the Grace Commission suggested. They do not usually need changes in law. In some places they do, but 8 chances out of 11 they could do it by administrative directive.

Have they done that, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would say to the gentleman that I have my doubts that the Secretaries of the Departments have followed the report to the extent that all of the recommendations could have been implemented at this time.

I do say to the gentleman, too, I have my doubts that all of the reductions can be made according to this report.

You know, when you get into health and education and these programs that mean so much to the people, it is easy in commission reports to recommend all kinds of things.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

(At the request of Mr. NATCHER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. ROEMER was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I have my doubts that the reductions on the order of those recommended in this commission report will take place.

Mr. ROEMER. Well, I thank my chairman, and I will be glad to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Iowa, in just a second.

I remind the chairman that I have admitted 10 percent savings in the Grace Commission, taking their $400 billion, I think we can do $1 out of $10.

In the area of administrative overhead, I have taken in my amendments one dollar out of twenty, so I agree with the chairman. Much of the Grace Commission directive is exaggerated.

Some of the things they suggest I think are bad management, but I would like the House of Representatives to know that one Member, the gentleman from Louisiana, feels that we do ourselves political as well as economic advantage if we take every bit of the Grace Commission that is feasible and implement it.

My question as I read this bill is, Have we done that?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROEMER. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the gentleman is exactly right. About 10 out of 11 of the items they recommended are a matter of executive discretion.

We have for the last 25 years or 27 years had a Government Operations Committee and we have had a General Accounting Office which review these matters. Year after year that is what they have done and that is what they will have to continue to do. Anything as big as the Government of the United States will always have some things that are wrong and some abuses. You have to keep looking for them year after year.

What are some of the other recommendations of the Grace Commission? Well, there are such things, for example, as eliminating COLA's. The President does not want to do that. He said he wants cost of living increases. There are other things that Congress is not going to do because the American people do not support elimination of such programs. Of course, if you want to sell all of the assets of the Federal government, you could get some money for them. For example, they talk about public buildings. Do you know that right now for the 40 percent of the public buildings that the Federal Government is renting, 60 percent of our total building cost is used to pay for that rental cost. It is more expensive to rent instead of less expensive. Some people assume that if the Government rents instead of buying a building it is less costly, but it is not so.

So the gentleman is exactly right. We should continue to look as we have been for the last 20 years at all ways to save, but the savings just are not there, and to tout that as some answer to our budget problem just will not square with the facts.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Let me say that I agree with the general premise that much of the Grace Commission is overstated. I agree with the general premise that much of the Grace Commission could be done by administrative fiat and/or directive, but I also agree with an internal feeling that I have that we will only get the savings called for if we in the Congress begin to slice the budget at the administrative level.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ROEMER was allowed to proceed for an additional 2 minutes.)

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, we will only get a portion even of these savings if we in the Congress begin to slice the budget at the administrative level and force the administrators to perform. I worry and wonder if they will perform without that kind of pressure.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROEMER. I will be glad to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, in all fairness, let us just take the Department of Labor in regard to the Grace Commission report in coming up with our budget.

In ETA, they reduced 300 jobs in 1984. They reduced the Federal rolls as a result of the job training program as well as decreased staff need through reorganization and management efficiencies.

In the Labor Management Services Administration [LMSA], there is a reduction of 27 jobs in this bill.

In ESA, they are reducing 98 jobs.

In OSHA, they are reducing 32 jobs.

They are reducing by a net total in Labor of over 600 people.

Now, I know the next question is, Why does it not show up in this budget? Well, you have got to realize, if you were here earlier in my presentation, we added a lot of money. We added about $1½ billion in higher education, about $600 million in the National Institutes of Health, about $400 million in chapters I and II; so we added $3.7 billion in total over the President's budget, which already took account of these savings.

Even though these Grace Commission recommendations have been followed, the bottom line is much higher than it would have been if we had not had these items.

□ 1200

Mr. ROEMER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think that we have saved some money from the Grace Commission?

Mr. CONTE. By all means.

Mr. ROEMER. How much do you think; has your committee been able to ascertain that? Because you knew some Member of Congress was going to ask that foolish question. If we have those billions out there to be saved, how much have we saved?

Mr. CONTE. Take the 612 reduction here in Labor that I just gave, and multiply that by $50,000, and you get an estimate of the savings in this one area. Obviously, there are others.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROEMER] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. ROEMER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the comments of the various members of the committee, particularly the gentleman from Massachusetts. I can only say that the Grace Commission savings, of which I see specific outlines here are not personnel. They are systems, and in a mangement enterprise you know that systems can eat you alive. Members of Congress have seen our own system eat us alive here on a few late nights.

Let me be specific. In the Department of Education they have an administration budget of a quarter of a billion dollars in this bill, $241 million in this bill. The Grace Commission said that in the administration of the Department of Education there are three separate major automated data processing systems. In one Department, three separate ADP systems. Input errors are common, they say. Reconciliations of financial systems accounts are not done on a regular basis, they say. And training of personnel responsible for internal controls is not adequate, they say.

They go on to say that competent, tough management could save $372 million in 3 years if applied to this single Department.

I wonder if anybody on the committee can give me a number or a guess at how much of that $372 million in the overhead of the Department of Education alone has been saved in this bill. Is there a way to ascertain that or is it all smoke and mirrors?

Mr. NATCHER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ROEMER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. I would say to the gentleman from Louisiana that I am unable to give him an answer to that question. Frankly, I doubt that anyone can give you an accurate figure.

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROEMER] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. ROEMER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. CONTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROEMER. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I know what the gentleman from Louisiana is getting at, and I can understand his frustrations. Regardless of political party, regardless of who is in office, there is that layer of bureaucracy down there that stays there no matter who comes in office.

Mr. ROEMER. Let us not let them win, I would say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. I hope we are not going to. We are watching them and we are watching them closely.

I have here in the area of management improvement in the Department of Education, of which the gentleman is speaking, their answer to my question about the Grace Commission, where they say the full-time equivalent employment in the Department has been reduced by over 30 percent, a savings of about $70 million, and that they expect further reductions in fiscal year 1985, a savings of $7.2 million.

Debt collection procedures have been strengthened. New regulatory and legislative changes are being proposed. The legislative change would, for example, allow lenders to require cosigners on tuition loans, authorize the use of private attorneys, and so on and so on. I could show you this. They have a whole list of things that they claim they have done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROEMER] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. ROEMER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. CONTE. What we really need, maybe, is some kind of oversight that would go after each one of these agencies and make sure that they are carrying out these recommendations.

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the gentleman. I do not want the Grace Commission to result in another congressional committee. That is probably not in our best interests.

Mr. CONTE. The Government Operations Committee ought to be doing it. They are here in existence now.

Mr. ROEMER. I think my proposition is this, because I do not have all of the answers, but as my frustrations rise I would like to see some numbers on data processing alone. The Grace Commission report said there were thousands of computers in our Government, often unconnected, often on different computer languages, and seldom doing the job that they were purchased to do. In education alone we could save more than $100 million on data processing if we were to organize it.

Who is organizing it? Reading this bill I would say no one.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise to speak in favor of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this is a very modest amendment. I think the committee ought to be indebted to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] for having raised this question.

We have already had I think a splendid discussion on whether or not we have utilized the Grace Commission report to its maximum efficient use within our operation. My guess is that most Members of Congress, and nearly everybody in the general public, would say we have not.

Now here in a bill which will be somewhere around $100 billion, when we come out of conference and the other body's add-ons are achieved, we are being asked to consider a few Grace Commission savings which amount to less than $150 million.

Two of those suggestions, some improvement of management controls in work flow in the Social Security Administration where it is now estimated that employee productivity levels are in the 50-percent range; and one other suggestion in the Department of Education where we are talking about reducing exposure to waste, fraud, and abuse and error, through improved internal controls, those two items alone make up two-thirds of the gentleman from California's amendment.

It seems to me that somewhere in this $100 billion we could squeeze a paltry $150 million for improved management controls. I am exceedingly disappointed that the committee leadership has not chosen to accept this amendment. I suggest it should be accepted simply as an experiment to see if we can put a little pressure on these departments and thereby have them save the taxpayers some money.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and rise in support of the amendment.

I also wish to agree with the gentleman from California's amendment. As the gentleman from Minnesota has appropriately pointed out here, this amendment represents less than one-twentieth of a percentage of the entire bill. If the House does not have the courage to address that sort of minuscule reduction in spending, then I do not think we are ever going to be able to address the fundamental issue of our deficit.

But, more importantly than that, this is not an across-the-board cut. This is a targeted attempt to react to a very legitimate study that was done by some very capable people in the area of cost savings. I am sure we have all gone back to our districts as we have campaigned in this election year, and we have talked about waste and fraud and abuse. And when somebody says, well, aren't you going to have to cut social spending to reduce the deficit, no, we said, we can do it with waste, fraud, and abuse. And if someone happened to come along, a conservative to say that you cannot do it because it will have an effect on defense systems, then we say no, we can do it through waste, fraud, and abuse.

Here is the perfect opportunity to do something with waste, fraud, and abuse. The Grace Commission is a legitimate document on that issue. It has made some excellent points. Whether you accept the entire document or whether you accept a percentage of it, the fact is that it is a legitimate document on the issue of waste, fraud, and abuse, and it raises some very significant questions about the way we are spending money, both on the administrative side and on the legislative side.

But this amendment is attractive because not only would this amendment address the issue of waste, fraud, and abuse, but to those of you on the other side of the aisle who want to get a few little kicks in at the administration, this is an amendment to direct the administration to do something on waste, fraud, and abuse. This is not an attempt to do it legislatively. This is an amendment which says to the administration, listen, your own commission directed you to make these savings; now we are not going to give you the money to spend because we know that you are going to come through on the issue of saving this money.

So this is an opportunity for all of us to say to the administration: "Live by the Grace Commission as you gave it to us."

I think that is a legitimate point.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREGG. I am happy to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

I do not know what the Members of his side of the aisle go home and tell folks about how they are going to balance this budget. Maybe you do say that you can do it through waste, fraud, and abuse.

Let me assure you that is not a democratic battlecry. The President went through an entire campaign saying we could balance the budget by just getting rid of waste, fraud, and abuse. What we have learned, at least on this side, is that that is nonsense.

Mr. GREGG. I think it is going to come as a surprise to the gentleman's constituents that he does not believe there is less than 1 percent of waste, fraud, and abuse in this bill and in the management of the dollars being spent by this bill. I think most of the American people accept the fact that within our agencies there is mismanagement, there is failure, and that certainly that failure and mismanagement exceeds 1 percent. This bill, this amendment, is requesting that we cut that agency less than 1 percent, actually less than half of 1 percent in order to address the issue of waste, fraud, and abuse.

□ 1210

I think it is a very legitimate amendment, and I support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following Members responded to their names:

Mr. Craig for, with Mr. Leland against.

Mr. Courter for, with Mr. Hawkins against.

So the amendments were rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6028, the Labor/HHS/Education appropriation bill for fiscal year 1985. This bill is a demonstration of the House's singular commitment to educational quality and equity. We cannot build a finer, educationally fit America by cutting back on educational opportunity and educational excellence. There is no such thing as the status quo in the pursuit of the highest quality American education—as a Nation, we are either moving forward or we are moving backward.

I want to commend my colleague and friend from Kentucky, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. NATCHER, for shepherding this very important bill to the House floor for our consideration today. I also want to acknowledge the outstanding work of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and the other members of the subcommittee for bringing us such a fine bill.

The bill is especially noteworthy for its provision in higher education, particularly those affecting the title IV, student assistance programs. For the first time, the Pell Grant Program will have a $2,100 maximum grant and cover 60 percent of the 'cost of attendance'. The College Work Study Program has been provided with a $45 million increase; Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants [SEOG] with a $50 million increase; and the National Direct Student Loan [NDSI] Program with a $20 million increase. These much-needed and long overdue increases in the student aid programs may seem modest to some of my colleagues, but they may mean the difference in attending college or not having the opportunity to pursue a postsecondary education. These increases will help many low- and middle-income students and their families afford the rising cost of attending the college of their choice or the only one the family can afford. As college costs have risen dramatically over the past 5 years, Federal student assistance has declined. Many minority and low-income students will never gain access to higher education unless this House takes a leadership role in providing the funding and access tools for these students. I commend Mr. NATCHER for taking a leadership role by bringing this bill to the House and urge my colleagues to support it.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. OLIN

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OLIN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment relates to a saving that is possible by recommendation of the GAO and the Grace Commission, and it is of concern to the committee. The item was included in the amendment just defeated. It is not my intention to prolong the debate on this subject, but the merits of this case may be unique. This amendment would reduce the appropriation to the 11 different parts of the National Institutes of Health, to recognize the fact that the overhead rates which they have been allowing to their grantees have risen over the years, from starting with a 15-percent cap in 1958 to 20 percent in 1963; in 1966, the cap was removed entirely; and then during the 1970's the overhead rates which were allowed to the grantees of NIH crept up from about 20 percent in 1966 to 30 percent in 1982. The estimate for 1985 fiscal year is 31 percent.

The GAO, in a study published this March, recommended to the administration that they implement fixed rates for the major NIH grantees. The Grace Commission estimated that these overhead costs which now amount to about $900 million a year could be cut as much as $167 million in the first year. That might be a little bit extreme, but, certainly there are some savings available here if the administration will take advantage of it.

My amendment would cut this $990 million which is available for overhead costs. Instead of cutting 10 percent as recommended by Grace, it would cut it 2.5 percent. We would be encouraging these agencies and the administration to exercise and implement the recommendations of the Grace Commission as well as the GAO report. The subject has been studied ad infinitum, I think Mr. Chairman, and the time is to act, and I recommend that this amendment be carried, and that the NIH appropriations be cut by $28 million.

I recognize that the chairman of the subcommittee has studied this, but I think in this case research would indicate that this saving is reasonable. No one will be hurt by it, and it will improve the operations of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I want it to be understood very clearly that my amendment in no way is intended to reflect poorly on the National Institutes of Health and the research which they conduct and support. All of us know that the NIH engages in some of the most advanced and pioneering research efforts of any institution in the world.

But in past 12 years, one portion of its budget has grown faster than any other. Since Congress removed the limitation on indirect cost reimbursements in 1966, that component has grown greatly. And it is one of the parts of the NIH budget that is hard to audit and verify.

Let's step back and look at the story.

In 1958, Congress imposed a 15-percent ceiling on indirect costs for outside research projects. The figure was raised to 20 percent in 1963, and lifted completely in 1966.

The General Accounting Office released its study in March 1984. In a 10-year period, 1972–82, indirect research costs climbed 315 percent, from $166 million to $690 million. During the same period, direct costs grew only 151 percent, from $642 million to $1.6 billion.

During this period, indirect costs grew from 20.6 percent to 30 percent of total NIH grants. The estimate for 1985 is 31 percent.

The President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control (Grace Commission) recommended a 10-percent across-the-board reduction in indirect costs. Similar proposals were made in the 1983 and 1984 fiscal budgets.

The Committee on Appropriations has ordered a study from the Department of Health and Human Services and wishes to address the problem of indirect research costs on a Government-wide basis. I commend the committee for their strong interest.

Mr. Chairman, we should not wait any longer. We know the problem exists and we know its extent. A modest beginning is all that my amendment calls for. It would put in place the incentives for further reductions and could serve as an example for other research agencies of the Federal Government.

My amendment is not as severe as the recommendation of the Grace Commission nor that of the previous amendment by the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] which was rejected.

The kind of expenses I am speaking of relate to administrative costs, use of equipment, operations and maintenance, or what the business world referes to as overhead. My amendment does not touch basic research, which is the heart and principal purpose of the entire NIH program.

My proposal to cut expenses by $28 million is very small, especially when we stop to remember we are considering an appropriation of more than $4 billion for one agency in this bill.

Indirect, administrative costs are the hardest to audit and verify. The GAO notes that very few of the grantees explain why their indirect costs have grown so sharply.

Mr. Chairman, if we begin modest cost reductions now, the NIH will be put well on the path of solving this problem. And in doing so, it could serve as a model for cost control and containment for other Government agencies engaged in similar endeavors.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment to reduce funds for reimbursement of indirect costs on research project grants is, at the least, premature. The President's Office of Science and Technology Policy has initiated a study on this particular matter, and we are now waiting to hear from this study.

This study is being undertaken in response to a directive from the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education to examine on a Government-wide basis this important, complex, and poorly understood subject. These costs are just as real as the so-called direct costs and are essential to the successful conduct of any research project or program. Until solidly based evidence is available that the costs are unwarranted, and none to that effect has been offered, the result of this proposal would, in reality, be a significant cut, Mr. Chairman, in the Nation's biomedical research effort, and would cause an unjustified delay in our fight against the many dread diseases for which we have included research funds in this bill.

I would like to call the gentleman from Virginia's attention to page 31 of our report in which we discuss indirect costs. The committee notes that NIH intends to reimburse fully the indirect costs on research grants in 1985. While the growth of indirect costs as a proportion of total costs is a major concern, the problem is not unique in NIH and should be addressed through a Government-wide plan.

The committee is aware that NIH has offered assistance to the Office of Science and Technology Policy and has provided comments to the General Accounting Office on its recent analysis of this issue. The committee requests a report from the Department prior to next year's hearings which would describe the status of discussions with OSTP and outline possible options for a Government-wide plan to contain indirect cost growth.

I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Virginia, our subcommittee recognizes the importance of this particular matter, we have discussed it in our hearings and in our reports for many years. It is a very complex problem. We continue to be concerned about the increase in indirect costs, and that is why we have incorporated this in our report. We understand the gentleman's intent, but at this particular time, I would say to the distinguished gentleman that his amendment should be defeated.

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OLIN. I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding, and I appreciate his point of view as expressed. On the other hand, I still think, as expressed by the gentleman from Louisiana here a while ago, that in some of these areas where we recognize that we have identified the source of inefficiency that needs to be improved, we have studied it carefully, that we not be caught in a situation where we are trying to correct the entire U.S. Government where we could take action in one particular area based on information at hand.

It is certainly not my intention to diminish the funds that are available for direct research in this area. But having come from private industry, I know something about overhead. I know how difficult it is to measure overhead and assess it properly. This situation calls for some fixed rates, which we will allow. We do not have to debate them; we do not have to audit them. We ought to move on this kind of a situation, Mr. Chairman, and I hope that regardless of what happens to this amendment, that the committees of Congress will move over the next year to take some action in this area.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to further say to the gentleman, the author of this amendment, that next year when we hold our hearings on the 1986 budget, or at any time a supplemental request is presented to our subcommittee which involves this particular matter certainly we are going to go into it; it is an important matter. But the part that bothers me the most, Mr. Chairman, is that the amendment is directed only to this particular bill, and only to grants for basic medical research when it is really a Government-wide problem, which affects all of our colleges and universities who receive Federal research grants.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, as well-intentioned as the amendment may be, I think the gentleman from Virginia may be getting into something in 10 minutes that the committee and the administration have been trying to figure out now for a couple of years, and I think we are making some progress on it. In fiscal years 1983 and 1984, the administration proposed decreasing the payment for indirect costs by a flat 10-percent across-the-board cut. In the fiscal year 1983 committee report on that bill, it said the following:

The committee is sufficiently familiar with the complex issues surrounding reimbursement for research costs to have reached the conclusion that a flat, across-the-board reduction in one component of cost is not an intelligent or equitable way to deal with them. The budget proposal subjects all grantee institutions to the same percentage reduction regardless of their cost consciousness or efficiency thereby reducing incentives for containing expenditures.

That the policy was not carefully thought through before its incorporation into the fiscal year 1983 budget request is clear from the fact that it would apply only to research supported by the National Institutes of Health, the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration. Other Federal agencies would continue to pay 100 percent of indirect costs.

In the fiscal year 1984 report it said:

The problem of rising indirect costs is not unique to NIH, which is not involved in setting the rate, and should be addressed on a government-wide basis. Accordingly, the committee recommends the administration in consultation with the administrators and scientists and representative grantee institutions take the necessary steps to formulate a government-wide plan for calculating indirect costs on research supported by all agencies with R&D budgets.

In the fiscal year 1985 budget, there was no request for reduction of reimbursement of indirect costs.

At our hearings, we questioned the Secretary and the Director of NIH to see what progress they were making. Here is what the Director of NIH had to say:

On February 14, Secretary Heckler sent a letter to Dr. George Keyworth, Science Adviser to the President. She recommended that the Office of Science and Technology Policy take an active leadership role in addressing the indirect costs issue on a governmentwide basis and offer to provide technical assistance where needed.

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OLIN. I hear what the gentleman has to say and I am pleased to have that information. On the other hand, here is a specific case with an agency of the Government, NIH, where overhead costs have gone 15 to 20 percent, to 25 to 30 percent, and now are 31 percent. The GAO report in March of this year recommended that the administration, the OMB, cause the NIH to negotiate with various grantees for fixed rates that fit their situation, not a flat rate.

By any stretch of the imagination, this 31 percent on the average can be reduced 2.5 points with no effect whatsoever on the effectiveness of research, and it will provide a tremendous stimulus for NIH to get this problem solved. It will also be an example for other agencies of the Government.

I, for one, do not think it makes sense to put off an area where you are pretty sure you know what to do, you are ready to do it. We ought to go ahead and do it, and not hide behind the fact that we need to straighten out the whole Government and avoid working on a problem that could be corrected.

Mr. CONTE. In answer to the gentleman, none of the studies commissioned by the committee recommended an across the board as a preferable option in controlling indirect costs.

I think we have made substantial progress here in addressing this issue. We have gotten the Administrator to move from a quick-and-dirty approach to a comprehensive Government-wide attempt to fashion a solution under the direction of the Chief Science Policy Adviser in the Government.

It is that kind of sound policy development that is likely to lead to true cost savings in the Government, not the slingshot or the ill-considered approach proposed by the gentleman's amendment.

I, therefore, urge rejection of the gentleman's amendment. Incidentally, the gentleman's amendment was part of the Dannemeyer amendment which we just defeated.

Mr. Chairman, we will work with the gentleman next year on this issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OLIN].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. Fifty-eight Members are present, not a quorum.

The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have responded. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

The pending business is the demand of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OLIN] for a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was refused.

So the amendments were rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] rise?

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRENZEL. Normally, Mr. Chairman, I thought we had rotated between the sides in recognizing Members for amendments. With the time limitation, we are clearly not going to get to debate all the amendments, and I make the inquiry to find out if there is some reason to recognize two majority amenders in a row.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was using its discretion. The gentleman from Michigan had approached the Chair and said that he had an amendment and he would like to offer his amendment as soon as he could, so the Chair was trying to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a further parliamentary inquiry.

I assume it is not strange to the Chairman that the gentleman would want to offer it in a hurry, but there are five or six other Members who are trying to get under the wire by 1:30.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FRENZEL. Under my parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the distinguished subcommittee chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota that this amendment that will be offered on this side will be accepted, and it should not take more than 2 minutes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the subcommittee chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] is recognized.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LEVIN OF MICHIGAN

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVIN of Michigan: Page 4, line 18, strike out "$2,305,898,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,342,898,000".

Page 4, line 21, strike out $740,398,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$777,398,000".

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I will be brief.

This amendment has been discussed with the chairman and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee. What this would do would be to increase the amount that is provided under the unemployment insurance and employment service operations provision.

Right now the amount allocated for those provisions would be frozen to the present level. This would increase it by the inflation rate so that in the conference committee there could be consideration of whether or not there should be some increase so that there does not have to be, as is currently happening in Michigan and other States, a closing of employment service offices and a shutting down of services that help to place the unemployed.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would hope very much that we will adopt this amendment so that it can be further considered, and carefully considered, within the conference committee.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I am honored to yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if the amount of his amendment is added to the amount of $740 million in the committee bill.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it increases it from $740 million to $777 million.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to this amendment on this side.

During the hearings with the Department, Mr. Chairman, we inquired as to whether or not this amount was sufficient, the amount that was incorporated in the bill. They advised us that they thought it was. We inquired as to what would happen if the amount turned out to be not sufficient. They informed us that they believed that the States could absorb the difference.

Mr. Chairman, there may be some States that cannot absorb the difference.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, on this side we accept the amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment comes as a surprise. I just saw it a few minutes ago when the gentleman from Michigan brought it over.

I am not going to argue against the amendment or for it, but we are going to look into this very, very closely, and if we do not feel it is the right thing to do, we will knock it out in conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ERLENBORN

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ERLENBORN: Page 29, line 9 strike out "$17,850,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$18,945,000".

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would restore funding for the Department of Health and Human Services, Office for Civil Rights, to the same level as last year's appropriation. The Committee bill reduced this funding by $1,095,000.

While I am reluctant to propose any funding increases in this bill, based on the importance of the duties and the likely increased caseload of this office. I do not believe that a cut in resources is appropriate. The Office of Civil Rights is, of course, the office within HHS which would investigate complaints about mistreatment of handicapped infants or "Baby Does."

Just a few weeks ago this House passed, after long debate, a bill setting up a procedure under which the States and the Federal Government will investigate complaints of mistreatment or nontreatment, and I am happy to report that the Senate has passed a similar bill. We will soon be in conference on that, and I am quite confident we will have the bill signed into law maybe by the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Complaints by the handicapped rights and prolife community about violations of Federal civil rights laws have run into many roadblocks this year. Due to the Federal court decisions, the HHS Office of Civil Rights has often found its hands tied in investigating and acting on those complaints. With the passage of the Murphy-Erlenborn provision, much of that confusion should be eliminated. It would be unfair at this point, when we are on the verge of establishing a system for dealing with these problems, to further hinder these efforts, due simply to a lack of funding in HHS.

Under the new procedures, the States have the primary responsibility for investigating and acting on "Baby Doe" complaints. The HHS Office of Civil Rights, however, still maintains an important role. It will be requested to advise the 50 States and other jurisdictions on what procedures would be appropriate and to provide backup investigatory resources.

Now, in this new office, with this new and expanded workload that would be placed on the office, H.R. 6028, as reported by the committee, would cut the budget and reduce the staffing by 50 positions. My amendment would not restore all 50 positions since it would not provide for inflation-related increases in salaries, rent, and other expenses. It would allow the office to avoid a cut of quite so many offices so that it may pursue "Baby Doe" complaints with sufficient resources.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is supported by the following associations: the Association for Retarded Citizens, the American Life Lobby, Down's Syndrome Congress, the Ad Hoc Committee in Defense of Life, Spina Bifida Association of America, Disability Rights Center, Inc., Christian Action Council, Doctors for Life, and the National Right to Life Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I would hope that my amendment would be adopted.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman on his amendment.

As I understand it, it restores $1,095,000 to the Office of Civil Rights within the Department of Health and Human Services, and this simply restores the budget of that Department to its fiscal 1984 level; is that correct?

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I was distracted. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I asked whether or not this restores the budget for the Office of Civil Rights within the Department of Health and Human Services to the fiscal 1984 level.

Mr. ERLENBORN. The gentleman is correct. It does not add above the 1984 level; it restores the budget to that level.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, not only does this office need this money, but it has an increased workload in investigating complaints on problems brought to it about handicapped infants that may be denied the usual routine medical care, food, and that sort of thing.

Mr. ERLENBORN. This is correct.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I think it is an excellent and necessary amendment, and I congratulate the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I stand up here to speak reluctantly, because I think we are within the 302(b) subcommittee allocation ceiling, within $1.7 million, and this just about bumps up against that ceiling. But the amendment appears to have merit, and I hope the subcommittee chairman can go along along and accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I yield to the subcommittee chairman.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, we have carefully considered the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN]. This would carry the funding of this office back to the 1984 level; that is correct, is it not?

Mr. ERLENBORN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the desk and identified as amendment No. 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: After line 6, page 56 add the following new section:

"SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, all funds appropriated by this Act, except those funds appropriated under:

(1) Title I, Department of Labor, Employment and Training Administration, for Federal Unemployment Benefits and Allowances;

(2) Title I, Department of Labor, Employment Standards Administration, for Special Benefits;

(3) Title I, Department of Labor, Employment Standards Administration, for the Black Lung Disability Trust Fund;

(4) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Health Resources and Services Administration, for Federal Interest Subsidies for Medical Facilities;

(5) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Office of the Assistant Secretary for Health, for Retirement Pay and Medical Benefits for Commissioned Officers;

(6) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Health Care Financing Administration, for Grants to States for Medicaid;

(7) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Health Care Financing Administration, for Payments to Health Care Trust Funds;

(8) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, for Payments to Social Security Trust Funds;

(9) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, for Special Benefits for Disabled Coal Miners;

(10) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, for the Supplemental Security Income Program;

(11) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, for the Assistance Payments Program;

(12) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, for Child Support Enforcement;

(13) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Human Development Services, for Social Services Block Grant;

(14) Title II, Department of Health and Human Services, Human Development Services, Family Social Services, for that portion of appropriations made available for the Foster Care Program and Adoption Assistance;

(15) Title III, Department of Education, for Rehabilitation Services and Handicapped Research;

(16) Title III, Department of Education, for Guaranteed Student Loans;

(17) Title III, Department of Education, for Higher Education Facilities Loans and Guarantees;

(18) Title IV, Related Agencies, Railroad Retirement Board, Federal Payment to the Railroad Retirement Accounts; are hereby reduced by 5.9 percent.".

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a simple one, and is similar to those I have offered to several appropriations bills. I remind Members again that our House-passed budget indicated that domestic discretionary spending ought to increase by no more than 3.5 percent. I have attempted, where possible, to provide means for Members to vote to uphold the budget resolution.

It was not my budget resolution. I felt it was too expensive. Since it is the only guide we have, my judgment is that we ought to support it.

The Labor-HHS appropriation includes $85,578,836,000 for all programs for fiscal year 1985. Of that, only a relatively small portion—$25,200,075,000—is discretionary spending. The remainder consists of mandatory spending which we are obligated to spend because of entitlement programs, and a small amount of other discretionary spending which is unauthorized and thus not appropriated in the House bill.

My amendment only affects the authorized discretionary spending included in the bill. For this year we appropriated $22,807,856,000 for those programs. For next year, as I have indicated, the committee has recommended $25,200,075,000. That is a 10.5-percent increase—far in excess of our budget's 3.5-percent limit.

My amendment makes a 5.9-percent reduction in that discretionary spending. If my amendment is accepted, discretionary spending in the bill would be $23,713,271,000—that is a 4-percent increase over last year's level—actually in excess of the budget resolution target.

However, there are also a dozen or so programs that are unauthorized and unappropriated. The Senate bill includes $7.9 billion for these programs, a 2-percent increase over last year's level of $7.8 billion.

In constructing my amendment, I assumed that the final appropriation would include funding for unauthorized programs. I assumed that the Senate's reported figure will be very close to the final amount. If so, the total for discretionary programs will be about $31.65 billion under my amendment. That is approximately a 3.5-percent increase over last year's $30.6 billion total level.

This amendment is a responsible one, in my judgment. It allows an increase in the House-reported programs of 4 percent—more than our budget allows. It also makes no adjustment for the recently passed math and science bill. If that is added to this bill, total discretionary spending will increase by as much as 5 percent. If we are serious about our budget, this amendment really ought to be made stricter.

Moreover, the amendment is also important for what is excluded. No reduction whatsoever is made in Social Security, medicare, medicaid, unemployment compensation, SSI, railroad retirement, black lung benefits, guaranteed student loans, and a long list of other programs. This amendment affects only about one-third of spending in the bill.

I really don't like across-the-board amendments. I would prefer to have the Appropriations Committee construct appropriations. However, this bill, as in the case of some that preceded it, is well over our budget limits. An across-the-board amendment preserves the proportions developed by the appropriations Committee. I know of no other way to try to reduce spending without radically altering the good work that the committee does on all these bills.

My personal preference would be not to inflict this extra cut on line items already frozen or reduced. A good example is funding for our libraries. The library funding in this bill has already been frozen. It should not be further reduced. However, my amendment is solely based on budget considerations. To add questions of item priority would hopelessly complicate my amendment. Therefore I had to keep it clean.

I urge a positive vote for my amendment.

□ 1310

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I regret very much that I have to oppose my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, because the gentleman and I usually are on the same side of the issue, but I think in this particular matter, he has gone a little too far.

This is a 5.9-percent across-the-board cut in the discretionary programs in this bill.

Let me tell the House something. We have heard a lot of discussion, and my good friend, to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] is very upset with me because he felt that as the ranking Republican, I should have supported his amendment.

Let me tell you something. Back in 1981 we had rescissions of some $14.5 billion. That figure was close to $13 billion in social programs and we gave the President that rescission. Do you know where that rescission went? It was the first time since the Budget Act that this Congress went along with that kind of a rescission. Do you know where that rescission went? The $13 billion did not go into savings, did not go to help balance the budget. It went right into Defense.

Then in 1981 we cut billions more out of the social programs in reconciliation. It did not go to balance the budget. It went right back, slid right into Defense.

We were spinning our wheels. Every cut that we were making was going into Defense.

Now, let me tell you this. The discretionary programs in this appropriations bill here are a half a billion dollars lower—listen to this—a half a billion dollars lower than the discretionary levels back in 1980. You know what has happened. We have had inflation in all those years. This bill is a half a billion dollars lower than 1980.

Now the gentleman from Minnesota wants to cut another 5.9 percent across the board by a meat ax approach in programs like education, health research, job training, community services for the poor, work incentive programs for AFDC recipients, and on and on.

I think it dispays a gross insensitivity to the needs of the people that are addressed in this particular bill. It would cut discretionary programs by $1.5 billion.

No one supports this amendment. The White House does not support this amendment. The Rose Garden agreement committed us to at least a $2.1 billion increase over the 1984 program level.

Now, this bill is over the Rose Garden agreement by about $400 million, I believe. I hope that by the time it gets back to the Rose Garden, it will be right on target, and the chairman and I are going to work toward that end; but this amendment would take a chain saw cut, not a clipper saw, a chain saw cut to the agreement that was made in the Rose Garden. It would cut a billion dollars out of the Rose Garden agreement.

Mr. Chairman, there would not be a rose bush left, if this amendment passed. All we would have would be weeds.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is defeated.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to concur with the statement that has just been made by my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

This is a meat ax amendment to this bill and it should not be agreed to.

We held hearings on this bill that lasted for some 14 weeks. We carefully marked this bill up. This bill is $421,733,000 under the fiscal year 1984 level.

Let me restate that. We are nearly half a billion dollars under the amount in the bill that we had in 1984.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, we are under the amount tentatively allocated to our subcommittee under the first budget resolution for 1985 as passed the House.

If you vote for this amendment, you cut spending for discretionary programs by approximately 6 percent. This is a total cut of $1.5 billion. As far as job training is concerned, you cut out $231,005,000.

Now, think about it. There are some 9 million or 10 million people unemployed. In H.R. 6028 we are trying to do something about it, Mr. Chairman. If we adopt this amendment, you cut out of this bill $231 million for the unemployed.

As far as the summer youth program is concerned—employment for the boys and girls in the cities during the summer, if you adopt this amendment, Mr. Chairman, you cut out $55,473,000.

As far as the National Institutes of Health are concerned, you would cut the National Institutes of Health by $290,061,000.

Research on cancer, heart and stroke, all of the diseases, would be cut.

Mr. Chairman, this is something that means so much to the people in this country. In cancer alone, the cut would be $65 million.

The Heart, Lung and Blood Institute would be cut $45,848,000.

As far as child health is concerned, $17,816,000.

As far as the aging are concerned, Mr. Chairman, National Institute on Aging, would be cut $8,406,000.

□ 1320

Alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health, $24,319,000; child welfare assistance, $9,900,000.

As far as elementary and secondary education is concerned, if you adopt the amendment offered by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] you reduce this bill $220,800,000 in chapter 1.

Under chapter 2, grants for special education, adoption of this amendment would reduce the bill $40,783,000.

Education for the handicapped, Mr. Chairman, would be cut $77,912,000; the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota would take vocational education down $43,879,000. Student financial assistance would go down $304,740,000. As far as Pell grants are concerned, $225,180,000. Other higher educational programs, Mr. Chairman, $27,563,000.

Mr. Chairman, this is strictly a meat ax approach. This amendment should be defeated.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAY. I would like to join with the chairman in urging that this body oppose the meat ax approach. Certainly the committee has done an excellent job, and as the ranking minority member has said, this goes beyond the bud and is going to produce nothing but weeds.

Mr. Chairman, I have a question concerning the bill before us today. Language in the committee report indicates that the additional $200 million for the chapter 2 education block grant could be used in part by States to offset losses suffered by the repeal of the Emergency School Aid Act. Is it your understanding, Mr. Chairman, that this additional funding does not preclude a separate appropriation at some future date for the new magnet school bill, H.R. 1310 title VII as passed by both House and Senate?

Mr. NATCHER. Yes; that is correct.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Louisiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. NATCHER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the fiscal 1985 Labor-HHS bill. I would like to commend the members of the subcommittee for their usual fine work on this bill. In particular, I would like to call attention to the subcommittee's continued strong support for the Ellender Fellowship Program administered by the Close Up Foundation. Our support for this program will permit many needy students from around the Nation to participate in Close Up.

I agree with many of the provisions in this bill and as the chair of the Crisis Intervention Task Force of the Select Committee on Children Youth and Families, I wish to comment particularly on the provision to continue funding for the 10 regional resource centers, and the one national center, at their current level through 1985. These centers which disseminate state-of-the-art information and technical assistance to States on issues concerning child abuse, foster care, runaway and adoption, are scheduled to be phased out October 1 by the administration.

This action seems inconsistent with the finding of the recently issued report by the Secretary of Health and Human Services on children in foster care. The report notes that between 1977 and 1982, the number of children in foster placement was reduced by more than half, from 500,000 to 243,000. In addition, the proportion of foster children free for adoption who are awaiting placements dropped from 49 percent to 34 percent.

In the report, the Secretary attributed these declines, in large part, to implementation of Public Law 96-272: The Foster Care and Adoption Assistance Act of 1980. Yet, a key mechanism for ensuring the continued success of the foster care reform legislation—the regional resource centers—will soon be eliminated.

In my own State of Louisiana, the region VI resource center in Austin, TX helped establish multidisciplinary teams to address cases of child abuse and neglect. These teams, an example of the new treatment technology in child abuse, help to prevent children from entering the foster care system. In addition, through its venture grant program, the region VI resource center funded innovative programs in Louisiana, involving the local business community, to promote adoption of special needs children.

Despite these good efforts, on August 31 the region VI resource center will close its doors. The center has been notified by the Office of Human Development Services, within the Department of Health and Human Services, that its funding will terminate the end of this month. All the other centers will also lose their funding by October 1, 1984.

H.R. 6028, a bipartisan effort, urges the Department of Health and Human Services to continue funding for the resource centers, at their current level, through 1985.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my distinguished colleague, the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky, if it was the express intent of the subcommittee to preserve and protect all of the regional resource centers to be funded at their current level, so that they may continue their vital work?

Mr. NATCHER. Yes; it is the intent of the subcommittee that the regional resource centers continue to exist and function through 1985.

Mrs. BOGGS. I thank the gentleman for yielding and for his affirmative answer.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to express some concern over the report language contained on page 105 of the House bill. There are two particular areas in that report language.

First of all, they have a phrase which says "despite the clear intent of the block grant legislation." I want to make sure that we understand that John Ashbrook and I were the sponsors and writers of the chapter 2 block grant legislation. And also I was the sponsor of Public Law 98-211 which amended that block grant, so that is an incorrect statement.

But the last phrase says, "at the level of funding that the local educational agencies received under the ESAA."

Now, it seems to me we are trying to encourage lawsuits with that kind of language. The language is in direct conflict with the authorizing statute, Public Law 98-211, which amended the block grant.

The authorizing committee did say, and in fact I was the author of the report language which stated, "It is the intent of the committee that section 565(a) of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 be interpreted such that State chapter 2 distribution formulas provide adjusted allocations to LEA's with only the greatest numbers or percentages of high cost children rather than allocations to LEA's with any number or percentage of such children."

This provision is a direct reference to the State distribution formula for the 80 percent of the funds that flow to the local education agencies and not, I repeat, not to the 20 percent setaside for State programs. In fact, it would be impossible to carry out the language in 98-911.

For example, in New York the total funding in fiscal year 1984 for State programs under the block grant, the so-called 20 percent, is $6 million. This $6 million would only be enough to fund one school district at the level anticipated in the report language.

If there were statutory language I am certain it would be subject to a point of order since it would dictate how and where the dollars were to be spent rather than providing a mere limitation on spending.

Since this is only report language it does not have the force of law but, nevertheless, I wish to register my concern about this language which is clearly erroneous.

Mr. CONTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. That report language is mine and it is not erroneous.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Over the 2 or 3 years that the chapter 2 block grant has been in operation, it has become clear that the States have not picked up the funding of that program. Cities that previously received ESAA funds have been left high and dry.

I have one such situation in my own district. The city of Holyoke received a 1 year funding grant of $300,000 to permit it to begin a voluntary school desegregation plan. Then chapter 2 came into effect.

Since that time, the State of Massachusetts has provided next to no assistance to the city of Holyoke to continue to implement that plan. Strapped by proposition 2½, the city has been scraping the barrel to try and run its plan.

But it is not my intention to require the States to spend their entire setaside on desegregation. There is nothing in this report language that would change the basic law.

But I do believe that States that have been doing nothing ought to get going and provide some help.

In addition, before I forget, I wanted to say something about the previous colloquy on regional resource centers.

In the subcommittee markup, the subcommittee restored the proposed budget cut in that line, which had been proposed for deletion in its entirety, back up to $10 million, the 1984 level.

I offered report language in that markup which can be found on page 97 of the committee report.

Let me state that it is my intention that with the funds added back into the bill, the regional resource centers be kept going at least through 1985.

I know that the Senate has similar language in its report, I would be happy to work toward assuring that these resource centers be kept in operation.

Mr. GOODLING. Then I would certainly agree with the gentleman. I am glad for the chance for the colloquy, because, as I indicated, the 80 percent is there and they should be forced to use that 80 percent for your purposes.

We want to make sure that there is nothing in the language which would say that this is the only reasonable thing they can do with this 20 percent.

I wrote this language to try to help your district, and particularly because New York was descending upon me constantly. So I think our colloquy has clarified it and I do not believe lawsuits now could become part of the daily problem that local school administrators would normally be faced with.

Mr. CONTE. I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his contribution.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the manager of the bill, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] a question regarding the Job Corps.

Mr. Chairman, the report of the Appropriations Committee states, on page 10, that—

> The committee strongly supports the civilian conservation centers currently operated by the Departments of Agriculture and Interior.

I believe that related language in the committee report needs clarification for purposes of legislative intent.

The Appropriations Committee has accepted the administration's budget request of $600 million for the Job Corps. Despite increased costs, the Appropriations Committee report indicates that an average enrollment level of 40,500 can be maintained with that appropriation, assuming offsetting cost savings resulting in part from "contracting of civilian conservation centers * * *. The Labor Department is instructed to keep the committee fully informed concerning the contracting of these centers."

What is the meaning the phrase: "contracting of civilian conservation centers?"

I take it that the Appropriations Committee is not endorsing the contracting out of any civilian conservation center as a whole. I know that the Job Corps has entered into contracts making provision for education and training programs at some of the conservation centers. However, the civilian conservation centers are located in national parks and forests. Very valuable work is performed by Job Corps members to improve these public lands. Supervision of that work must continue to be the responsibility of the Department of Interior and Agriculture which are responsible for these parks and forests.

The Job Corps may, where appropriate, negotiate contracts with private contractors to carry out some of the functions of operating civilian conservation centers.

But would the manager of the bill agree with me that we do not intend to see the total operation of any civilian conservation centers turned over by the Federal Government to private contractors?

□ 1330

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to my distinguished friend from Kentucky, chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, that it is not the intent of our subcommittee or our Committee on Appropriations to see that the total operation of any civilian conservation centers is turned over by the Federal Government to private contractors. That is not our intent.

Mr. CONTE. I agree with the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential motion at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will state the motion.

The Chair will first advise the gentleman that it is not debatable at this point under the unanimous-consent agreement.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Is it not true that on behalf of this motion this Member would have 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the bill and all amendments to the bill under the unanimous-consent agreement was to end at 1:30, unless amendments had been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. This is not an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the bill ended at 1:30, under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Maybe this Member does not understand, but the preferential motion takes precedence over the time limitation that has been agreed to; does it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It could be offered, but there will be no debate on the preferential motion.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. This Member would have no time on behalf of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would not have any time under the unanimous-consent agreement.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALKER. The time limitation was on the bill itself; is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WALKER. The preferential motion deals with a specific motion before the House which would be my understanding, would permit the gentleman 5 minutes of time to debate his motion. That is the pattern that I have understood we have used before when time limitations have been declared. Is this a change of policy on the part of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the precedents of the House are that when the time limit is on the entire bill, that includes all motions thereto.

Mr. WALKER. So that the Chair is ruling that this motion is a part of the debate on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent this Member be given 5 minutes to speak on behalf of the motion.

Mr. DURBIN. Objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from California?

Mr. DURBIN. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Does the gentleman wish to offer his preferential motion?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that preferential motion, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not offered.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2 of rule XXIII, he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the Committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

RECORDED VOTE

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business is the demand of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] for a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 144, noes 276, not voting 13, as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROEMER

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the amendment printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ROEMER. No; it was not, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROEMER: Page 42, line 9, strike out "$241,075,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$222,675,000".

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROEMER. As I understand it under the rules, I am not allowed to debate the amendment. Am I in order to ask unanimous consent for 1 minute, divided between the chairman of the committee and myself?

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous consent, if granted——

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 4 minutes, during which to discuss my amendment, divided equally between the chairman of the subcommittee and myself. Two minutes each way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROEMER].

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DAVIS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the amendment printed in the RECORD?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, Mr. Chairman; it was.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS: Page 3, after line 16, insert the following:

For establishing and operating an Indian and Rural Youth Emphasis training center at Newberry, Michigan, as authorized by section 427 of the Job Training Partnership Act, $4,750,000, in addition to amounts otherwise provided herein.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] reserves a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DAVIS].

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I am offering an amendment today to establish a Job Training Center for the Indian and rural youths of several Northeast and Midwest States, to be located at Newberry, MI. This project would give vital employment training to these young people from Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, New York, Iowa, Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Vermont.

The center is proposed by the Intertribal Council of Michigan and has the unqualified support of the Four-State Indian Assembly—representing the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Michigan, and the support of the New England Indian task force—representing all federally recognized tribes in New England.

At a cost of $4.75 million, this project would train approximately 900

Indian and rural youths per year at a site which is unique I'm sure to the Job Corps center program. It is a former mental health facility owned by the State of Michigan. Michigan has offered to lease the entire site for $1 a year for this project. The campus already has in place 12 buildings which include all the dormitory, food service, and recreational facilities needed, as well as plenty of classroom and workshop space. With some renovation, the center could be in operation within 6 months of funding. Because of the high unemployment remaining in rural areas and especially among Indian populations of this region, this project could have a lasting effect on the employment picture for many youths who find themselves ill-prepared for today's job market. Additionally, such a project would provide an economic boost to a small community such as Newberry, where countywide unemployment still runs at 17 percent. This project would also put to good use an excellent facility which now stands empty.

For these reasons the proposed center also has the full support of Michigan Gov. Jim Blanchard, as well as the Michigan State Legislature, the Michigan Departments of Mental Health and Social Services, the Michigan Employment Security Commission and Michigan Senators DON RIEGLE and CARL LEVIN.

Finally, it is important to know that there currently are only two Indian job corp centers in the United States. They are the Kicking Horse Center in Montana and the Talking Leaf Center in Oklahoma. These centers have proven very successful, placing over 60 percent of enrollees in viable jobs. Both of these projects have long waiting lists and because they give priority to local applicants, are not able to serve the large population of youths in the Northeast and Midwest areas—a population of about 170,000 young native Americans. I feel strongly that this project can make a difference for the employment prospects of many young people in this region and I believe we can make an important and wise investment of Federal dollars. I urge my colleagues to accept this amendment today.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to pursue my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that I regret that I have to raise this point of order against my good friend from Michigan, but there are only a couple of berries left in the basket, and JOHN ERLENBORN took those berries out.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the amendment violates section 303A of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, which sets forth in section 1007 of the House Manual, which provides that it shall not be in order in the House of Representatives to consider any bill or resolution or amendment thereto which provides new budget authority for the fiscal year until the first concurrent resolution on the budget for such a year has been agreed to.

The amendment provides new budget authority for the 1985 fiscal year. A concurrent resolution on the budget for the 1985 fiscal year has not been agreed to. Therefore, the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN [Mr. FUQUA]. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard?

The Chair is prepared to rule that the amendment is out of order under section 303 of the Budget Act. It does grant new budget authority for a fiscal year for which the first concurrent budget resolution, has not been adopted, and therefore the amendment is out of order.

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to stress the vital importance of the funding for research on AIDS [acquired immune deficiency syndrome] included in the fiscal year 1985 Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill as well as the fiscal year 1984 supplemental that we are acting on today.

The AIDS epidemic had taken nearly 2,400 lives by mid-July, and more than 5,200 cases had been reported to the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta. And the relentless killer is not slackening its cruel pace.

Yet in an appalling demonstration of disregard, the Reagan administration failed to sent to Congress an updated budget request for AIDS. Administration officials apparently totally ignored a memo written in May by Assistant Secretary of Health Dr. Edward Brandt, Jr., noting the need for an increase of more than $20 million in fiscal year 1984 for AIDS and nearly $36 million in fiscal year 1985 based on recent research advances on the probable cause of AIDS and the probable development of a blood test for AIDS.

The adminstration's failure to act has meant that all congressional work on AIDS in the fiscal year 1984 supplemental and the fiscal year 1985 Labor-HHS-Education appropriation had to be done in an information vacuum, without the basic background needed from officials involved in the AIDS program at the Public Health Service.

This neglect has harmed the AIDS program as well as many other vital public health activities which had to be shortchanged so that AIDS research could continue.

Despite this lack of cooperation, the Appropriations Committee has approved increases for AIDS in fiscal year 1984 and 1985. These include an overall increase for the National Institutes of Health [NIH] of $600 million in fiscal year 1985 with instructions that sufficient moneys be made available to meet additional AIDS research needs, and a small increase of $1.6 million to CDC for a total CDC expenditure of $15.35 million in fiscal year 1985. An additional $8 million for AIDS was included in the fiscal year 1984 supplemental as well.

I commend the distinguished chairman of the Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Subcommittee, Mr. NATCHER, for his concern and leadership on this issue and urge that the subcommittee continue to monitor the spending levels and needs of the AIDS programs.

Secretary Heckler has repeatedly stressed that AIDS is the Nation's No. 1 health priority. The action with regard to the AIDS funding demonstrates that that those words are only empty rhetoric.

Last month I wrote to Secretary Heckler urging that the budget request immediately be approved and communicated to Congress. I am inserting a copy of that letter in the RECORD at this point:

INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS AND HUMAN RESOURCES SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, DC, July 9, 1984.

Hon. MARGARET HECKLER,
Secretary, Department of Health and Human Services, Washington, DC.

DEAR MADAM SECRETARY: I am writing to express my deep concern about the Department's requested funding levels for the Public Health Service's program to control the AIDS epidemic.

Federal health officials have maintained that once a probable cause of the disease is discovered, additional resources would be required to support expanded research efforts. In accordance with this research strategy, Dr. Edward Brandt, Assistant Secretary for Health, has requested your favorable consideration of additional funds for the PHS effort to combat the AIDS epidemic. In a May 25 memorandum obtained by the subcommittee, Dr. Brandt states that the PHS needs a FY '84 supplemental of $20 million and 4 FTE's and a FY '85 budget amendment of an additional $35.8 million and 37 FTE's "in order to seize the opportunities which the recent breakthroughs have provided." It is my understanding that this urgent request has yet to be approved by your office and forwarded to the Office of Management and Budget for its consideration.

As you are aware, there has already been considerable Congressional action on both a FY '84 supplemental and the FY '85 Labor-HHS appropriation. Unfortunately, these actions have been taken without the benefit of timely and realistic budget information that is based on the expert scientific judgments of public health officials involved in conducting the PHS's AIDS program. I fear that delays in communicating these critical funding needs will only hamper the ability of the Public Health Service scientists to plan and carry out their work with the urgency demanded by this epidemic.

In keeping with your April 23 pledge that "there will be no pause in bringing the full benefits of today's discovery (HTLV-III) to the victims of AIDS and those at risk," I urge you to approve this PHS funding request and insure that it is promptly communicated to Congress.

I would appreciate your providing the subcommittee with all documents pertaining to additional AIDS funding.

Thank you for your cooperation on this important matter.

Sincerely,

TED WEISS,
Chairman.●

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having assumed the chair, Mr. FUQUA, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6028) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit with instructions.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. MYERS

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee, I was standing, waiting to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman have a motion?

Mr. MYERS. I offer a motion to recommit, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MYERS. In its present form, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MYERS moves to recommit the bill, H.R. 6028, to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 329, noes 91, not voting 13, as follows:

RECOGNIZING THE ANNIVERSARIES OF THE WARSAW UPRISING AND THE POLISH RESISTANCE DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S.J Res. 272) recognizing the anniversaries of the Warsaw uprising and the Polish resistance to invasion of Poland during World War II, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of our subcommitte, for the purpose of explaining this resolution, if he will.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I speak in support of Senate Joint Resolution 272 to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the Warsaw uprising on August 1, 1944.

The Warsaw uprising was an event of major significance in the history of World War II. The crucial role and heroic resistance of the Polish Home Army in that uprising is a source of inspiration to all of us and worthy of our praise.

The spirit of Polish resistance to foreign oppression and domination is symbolized by this historic event. It is remembered by Poles everywhere. That same spirit in the Polish national character was manifested in the emergence of the Solidarity Trade Union movement in 1980.

Mr. Speaker, Senate Joint Resolution 272 is similar to House Joint Resolution 560 which was introduced by our colleague Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI on May 2, 1984. I want to commend our colleague from Illinois for his strong leadership on this issue.

I hope my colleagues will join in this special recognition of what started on August 1, 1944, and the important role of the Polish Home Army in the Allied war effort.

I urge the adoption of Senate Joint Resolution 272.

□ 1430

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, courage is a difficult quality to define and it is rarely found in abundance at any one time in history. But as we stand here today on the eve of the 40th anniversary of the Warsaw uprising, we can recall a time when courage was both instantly recognizable and uncommonly plentiful. The heroic resistance of the Polish people to the invasion of Poland by the armies of Germany and later the Soviet Union rose to its zenith during the Warsaw uprising. The Polish Home Army held major portions of the city for 63 days against the relentless pounding of vastly superior numbers of a well-supplied German Army. The dramatic suffering and sacrifice of 250,000 Polish casualties is compelling testimony to the courage of the Polish people. Throughout the duration of the uprising the Soviet Army stood posed but motionless outside the city offering no assistance to the battling freedom fighters within.

Today, the Polish Government and its Soviet supporters offer nothing in the way of assistance to Polish people seeking freedom in the spirit of the Warsaw uprising. Officially outlawed, the Solidarity trade union movement clings with teeth-clenched determination to its goal of a society characterized by freedom, democracy, and self-determination. In recognizing the anniversaries of the Warsaw uprising and the resistance to the invasion of Poland during World War II, we highlight the struggle of the Polish people that continues today. We can't help but be reminded of the courage of the people of Warsaw in 1944 as we observe the same courage and determination evident in the Poland of today.

Mr. Speaker, it is only fitting that the Congress recognize these events which symbolize the value we all attach to the attainment and preservation of freedom and liberty.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 272, legislation recognizing the anniversaries of the Warsaw uprising and the Polish resistance to the invasion of Poland during World War II. I commend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] for taking the initiative of bringing this important measure before the House.

The resolution points to the heroic spirit and deeds of the Polish people, attributes for which they continue to be well known.

As the resolution indicates on August 1, 1944, the Polish Home Army, under the command of Gen. Tedeusz Bor-Komorowski rose up against the Nazis who had begun evacuating Warsaw in the face of the Soviet sweep through Eastern Europe. These courageous Poles "held major portions of the city for 63 days against insuperable odds and suffered extreme hardship, retribution, and personal sacrifice throughout a heroic engagement in which approximately 250,000 Poles were killed, wounded, or missing.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is entirely appropriate and fitting that Congress recognize the courage and manifest dedication to the pursuit of freedom demonstrated by the heroic Poles. As the resolution points out, the Warsaw uprising "stands as a poignant reminder to the world of the power of the human spirit over adversity." It is a lesson that millions of Poles today bear clearly in mind as they too fight against Communist adversity which now plagues Poland.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support Senate Joint Resolution 272.

● Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, 40 years ago today the Polish Home Army under the command of Tadeusz Bor-Komorowski rose up against the Nazi occupation forces in Warsaw. Greatly outnumbered and inadequately armed, the Polish Home Army continued its struggle for 63 days, allowing General Eisenhower and the Allied Forces to capture much of Germany. Over 250,000 Polish citizens were killed, wounded, or captured in the struggle.

Senate Joint Resolution 272, which is identical to House Joint Resolution 560, which I have introduced in the House, commemorates this heroic effort. In addition, this resolution acknowledges the self-sacrifice of the three leaders of the Home Army: Lt. Gen. Stefan Rowecki, murdered by the Gestapo in 1944; Lt. Gen. Tadeusz Bor-Komorowski, captured after the Warsaw uprising and died in London in 1966; and Maj. Gen. Leopold Okulicki, who died in a Soviet jail in 1945. Under the leadership of these three men, the Polish Home Army functioned as the largest and best organized Nazi resistance effort in occupied Europe, and so provided the Allied effort with invaluable assistance.

The Communist government of Poland has refuse to recognize the meaning of this historic uprising, at a time when the Polish people continue to struggle for freedom. On the 40th anniversary of the Warsaw uprising, let us remember those who gave their lives in the home army's valiant struggle to keep Poland free.●

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of Senate Joint Resolution 272, commemorating the 40th anniversary of the Warsaw uprising on August 1, 1944. At the outset, I want to commend the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], for his outstanding and persevering leadership on this issue, who introduced an almost identical resolution, House Joint Resolution 560 in the House.

The Warsaw uprising of 1944 is both a glorious and tragic event. During the Nazi withdrawal from the city of Warsaw, a withdrawal filled with the worst sort of brutality against the Polish people, the Polish Home Army, under the command of Gen. Tadeusz Bor-Komorowski led a rebellion against Nazi tyranny.

For 63 days, the Polish people rose up against the Nazi occupation. Against insurmountable odds, the Poles desperately struggled to regain their freedom. The rebellion cost the lives of some quarter of a million Poles. The leaders of the rebellion, including General Bor-Komorowski, were imprisoned or killed.

Senate Joint Resolution 272 properly commemorates the events of August 1944, and correctly states that the uprising, "stands as a poignant reminder to the world of the power of the human spirit over adversity." I am pleased to support the resolution and hope that the House will approve it overwhelmingly.●

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 272

Whereas August 1, 1984, marks the fortieth anniversary of the Warsaw uprising, an event of major significance in the history of World War II;

Whereas on August 1, 1944, the Polish Home Army under the command of General Tedeusz Bor-Komorowski rose up against the Nazis who had begun evacuating Warsaw in the face of the Soviet advance through Eastern Europe, held major portions of the city for sixty-three days against insuperable odds, and suffered extreme hardship, retribution, and personal sacrifice throughout a heroic engagement in which approximately two hundred and fifty thousand Poles were killed, wounded, or missing;

Whereas September 1, 1984, marks the forty-fifth anniversary of the invasion of Poland by the Army and Air Force of the Third Reich, which was followed just sixteen days later by the Soviet invasion from the East and the subsequent occupation of a zone populated by thirteen million Poles, these events having led to the development of a strong underground movement directed by the Polish Government in exile;

Whereas the three wartime leaders of the Polish Home Army, Lieutenant General Stefan Rowecki, murdered by the Gestapo in 1944, Lieutenant General Bor-Komorowski, imprisoned by the Nazis and died in London in 1966, and Major General Leopold Okulicki, imprisoned by the Soviets and perished in a Soviet jail in 1945, symbolize the supreme personal sacrifice and commitment to the cause of freedom and self-determination;

Whereas the spirit of Polish resistance to foreign oppression and domination is symbolized by these historic events and remains a vital element in the Polish national character as manifested by the emergence of the Solidarity Trade Union movement in 1980; and

Whereas, in prior years, the President has granted special recognition to these important days in Polish history, with particular regard to the crucial role of the Polish Home Army in the Allied war effort, and to the leaders of the Polish Home Army: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States joins in recognizing the anniversary of the Warsaw uprising, which stands as a poignant reminder to the world of the power of the human spirit over adversity, and the anniversary of the Polish resistance to the World War II invasion of Poland and the leaders of that resistance, which symbolizes the currently continuing struggle of the Polish people and freedom loving people everywhere in the preservation of their liberties and in fulfillment of their national aspirations.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 6040, and that I may include extraneous and tabular material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1984

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6040) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to not to exceed 1 hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

□ 1435

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 6040, with Mr. BROOKS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, our Committee on Appropriations brings to you a good bill, the supplemental appropriation for fiscal year 1984. This bill is necessary for the remainder of the year.

We are trying to get all our bills passed through the House and hopefully through conference. Already three bills have been signed into law, our actions this morning in passing the Labor-HHS bill means 10 bills have been passed, 11 have been reported. My attention is called to the fact that we have only 21 days, active days, left before the end of this session, so we must move quickly.

The supplemental appropriation bill virtually covers the entire Government and has many critically needed items in it for the veterans, food stamps, and other items which I will describe.

This bill which we bring to you is under the President's budget request by some $930 million. It is under the House Appropriation Committee 302 budget allocation for fiscal year 1984 by $768 million. And it is under the revised fiscal year 1984 budget ceilings contained in the House-passed budget resolution which is what our committee has promised to live under. We are under that revised figure by some $209 million.

May I say that in this bill we have dealt with many, many items. The reductions that have been made fall in the increases requested for various aspects of foreign aid. But I would call your attention to the fact that great increases have been requested in that area and if we had not reduced those items we would have had to reduce domestic programs in order to make it up.

I repeat again, this bill is under the three budget measures that we come under, and which we have agreed to cooperate. That is the ceiling imposed by the House on itself where we have committed ourselves orally and in our presentation to the Congress to stay within that limit. Also under the 302 allocation as called for by the Budget Act and your Committee on Appropriations is living within that. And as I have pointed out, this is some $930 million below the amount recommended by the President, though the committee is recommending various priority shifts as to where this money should go.

May I point out that involved in this, 92 percent of the amount of money involved in the overall bill is for a dozen or so important items. For example, $700 million is for food stamps. Also Public Law 480, $175 million, HUD-assisted housing, the EPA Superfund, the FEMA emergency food and shelter program, veterans' programs, including loans, loan defaults, and compensation and pensions. We have the strategic petroleum reserve, the HHS Office of Human Development, rehabilitation services, and handicapped research, payments to civil service retirement and disability funds, and, of course, the increased pay costs for civilian and military pursant to a law which the Congress passed and was signed by the President.

As you know, in our system we have 13 subcommittees. They have spent hours upon hours going over the testimony and going over the requests, reviewing the needs. I come to you as chairman of that committee for the members of each of the subcommittees. but this represents the judgment of the various subcommittees which has been put together.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I insert in the RECORD a brief summary of the major items in this bill:

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL, 1984—SELECTED MAJOR ITEMS

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee is the second supplemental for the 1984 fiscal year.

The bill totals $5.4 billion in budget authority, of which $4.8 billion, or 89 percent, is provided for programs where supplementals were requested by the President.

Four of these programs will run out of funds if supplemental appropriations are not enacted before the August recess: $700 million for food stamps, $155 million for veterans compensation and pensions, $52 million for veterans readjustment benefits, and $260 million for veterans loan guarantees.

The remaining supplementals for programs where funds were requested by the President are: $274 million for operation and maintenance in the Department of Defense, of which approximately $118 million is for costs associated with operations in Lebanon, and Grenada, and $156 million is for increased civilian personnel costs such as social security taxes, health insurance, and disability compensation; $175 million for titles I and III of Public Law 480, which finance sales of agricultural commodities for dollars or convertible foreign currencies on credit terms; $50 million for EPA's Superfund to initiate planning, design, and cleanup work at additional abandoned hazardous waste sites; $459 million for the strategic petroleum reserve, which is intended to assure that funds are available for construction contracts at Big Hill, TX; $102 million for the FAA to liquidate defaulted aircraft loans; $238 million for the civil service retirement and disability fund; $2 billion for increased costs of the January pay raise that have already been incurred by Federal agencies.

The committee report shows that the bill is $931 million below the President's budget estimates. However, this figure consists of cuts totaling $1.3 billion in DOD pay, the Library of Congress, foreign aid, and atomic energy defense activities, plus assorted addons of $392 million.

The bill does not require a budget waiver because the Budget Committee has given our committee credit for the $2 billion synfuels rescission in the Deficit Reduction Act.

In a nutshell, that is the second supplemental. It will not be an easy vote for many Members, particularly on this side of the aisle.

On the one hand the bill does contain urgent appropriations for food stamps, DOD operations, veterans programs, civil service retirement, and pay costs. On the other hand, the bill contains $392 million in assorted addons.

I intend to vote for the bill. I think that the funds provided for programs where the administration has requested supplementals are, on balance, more important than such election-year frivolities as $2.5 million to restore Franklin Roosevelt's yacht.

I opposed the bill in committee. We should have, and could have, done a better job in cutting unrequested supplementals. But we are past that point now. The recess is only 8 days away. We do not have time to go back to our subcommittees and construct another bill. Accordingly, based on the urgent appropriations before the House, I will vote "yes."

During the full committee meeting on July 26, when we reported the second supplemental, it was estimated that the revised bill would exceed our allocation of discretionary budget authority by $1.1 billion. That estimate was derived as follows:

[In billions of dollars]

Amount remaining to the committee, as reported by the Budget Committee on April 26, 1984 (H. 3122)	−2.061
Discretionary programs in House Joint Resolution 492 as enacted	+.578
Discretionary budget authority in revised second supplemental, as drafted	+2.590
Amount over allocation	+1.107

However, also on July 26 the Budget Committee filed a new status report which shows that the committee is $3.481 under its allocation of discretionary budget authority—H-7959. This figure was apparently derived by using the $2 billion synfuels rescission in the Deficit Reduction Act to offset discretionary budget authority in fiscal 1984.

The current estimate is:

[In billions of dollars]

Amount remaining based on status report of April 26	−2.061
Synfuels rescission in the Deficit Reduction Act	−2.000
Discretionary programs in House Joint Resolution 492 as enacted	−.578
Senate office buildings in 1985 legislative bill	+.002
Amount under allocation	+3.481
Discretionary budget authority in revised second supplemental, as reported	+2.713
Amount under allocation, counting revised second supplmental as reported, and synfuels rescission	−.768

Using the Synfuels rescission to offset 1984 discretionary budget authority is highly questionable. The funds rescinded were appropriated in the fiscal 1980 Interior bill. Section 5(b) of the 1984 budget resolution establishes the scorekeeping procedure which we are now working under, based on "new discretionary budget authority." It simply does not make sense to use a rescission of budget authority provided in fiscal 1980 to offset the committee's allocation of new discretionary budget authority for fiscal 1984.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, chapter V includes funds for a number of programs of a supplemental and emergency nature.

To begin with, we have recommended $260 million to cover losses in the veterans loan guaranty revolving fund. These losses are the result of a substantial increase in defaults on veterans home loans. I should point out that we expect an additional $400 to $500 million will have to be appropriated in fiscal year 1985 to meet these losses and insure the integrity of the fund.

We have also included an appropriation for $60 million for the housing and feeding of homeless Americans. This appropriation is necessary to meet the homeless problem in the coming winter. The funds are provided, as they have been in the past, through the Federal Emergency Management Agency and are available through the private voluntary organizations. I should point out that in the committee report we make clear that restrictions on the use of funds for rehabilitating existing facilities and paying utility costs are to be lifted in order to insure the broadest use of these funds.

Chapter V also includes $5 million for design work on a stop gap emergency sewage treatment plant in San Diego, CA. The purpose of this plant is to treat up to 30 million gallons of Mexican sewage that each day is polluting water in and around San Diego.

Because of the circumstances and the emergency nature of this problem—Federal action and separate funding has been provided in this bill. At the same time, it was our opinion that because this plant would treat Mexican wastewater—the Mexican Government should make some contribution to this effort. We have provided a legisaltive mechanism that requires the President to certify such a contribution, and we also require that State and local funding for this project represent not less than 10 percent of the total cost.

We have also included $150 million in chapter V for the section 235 Homeownership Assistance Program. This program was authorized in the 1983 Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act—But was not funded in the final 1984 appropriation bill. The $150 million recommended should give the restructed program an opportunity to see what can be accomplished in various areas of the country. It is expected that the program could be particulary beneficial in aiding low-income families.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we have recommened the full $50 million requested for the Superfund activities and we have included $2 million for the Federal Emergency Management Agency section 1362 program. This activity provides for the acquisition of flood damaged structures. These funds are needed on an emergency basis to meet serious flooding problems in various areas throughout the United States.

Mr. Chairman, that is a brief summary of what is contained in Chapter V.

I would hope that the members of the Committee will support this chapter and the bill itself.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would point out to the House that some of the money that we have in here is money that we could have expected to come along in a supplemental appropriation because last year we tried to pull the wool over the eyes of the American people about what it was we were doing when we were spending money. The main area here is the food stamp program. There is $700 million in this bill for the food stamp program.

We may remember last year when we were going through the appropriations processes we were told we were keeping this appropriation under the budget, but it turned out we were only appropriated money for food stamps for a part of the year.

Now, sure enough, we come back and we have to fund the program for the rest of the year that we did not fund it for last year so that we could pretend to be staying under the budget.

So once again we see the sham revealed for what it is when we finally get to the supplemental appropriation.

We have got $700 million here that we are having to spend for food stamps because we did not appropriate enough money in the first place.

I think that tells the American people just what has gone wrong with the spending and budgeting process around this House.

We also have in this bill approximately $1 billion of money that the administration has not requested. The idea that we are coming to this floor with this supplemental because the administration is demanding that we spend this money when the administration makes their claim that there is over $1 billion of money that is in this bill that has absolutely nothing to do with their request. So we are in fact dealing with a supplemental appropriation which goes far beyond what the administration has sent up here asking to be spent.

So anybody who votes for this particular supplemental ought to realize that we are spending money above and beyond what the administration thinks is necessary and we are also spending money that is above and beyond the budget process that we spent a lot of time with last year.

I would suggest we may want to vote for what I would call the Mondale-Ferraro amendment later on, which will be a 1-percent cut which will attempt to do something to bring down the spending level in this bill.

Mr. Mondale's and Ms. FERRARO's statements yesterday about how the deficit is devastating poor people in the country, I would think we would want to do what we can on this House floor today and help the poor by voting for less deficit.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

May I say last year we were unable to get a budget request from the administration for the money required by law for food stamps. Being unable to get a budget request, though we had asked for it, we appropriated the amount in the President's budget for the time for which it would last. We finally received the budget request for the $700 million that is needed to complete the fiscal year. That request was submitted to Congress on July 27, only four days ago.

May I say that the gentleman [Mr. WALKER] is right. This bill represents $930 million less than was recommended by the President, but we have put it in those places where the 57-member Appropriations Committee thought best and we recommended it to you.

So what we have done has failed to go along with that item by item as requested by the Office of Management and Budget, but we have stayed within the overall limit.

I respectfully submit it and it is up to the Congress to determine to what projects money should be appropriated. After all this is a recommendation. It represents our best judgment. We have been completely fair. The statements are made as a matter of record. We so advised the House on the last year.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I have generally problems with supplementals, but in light of some of these requests I think are legitimate when you go through this section by section—and I am a member of the Appropriations Committee—I do have problems, however, with the Maritime Administration request, or whoever made the request to our committee, in respect for $2.5 million to be matched by local equal funds for the modernization and restoration of the Presidential Franklin Roosevelt yacht.

I do not see that as an emergency, as a crisis in this nation. I do not think it is appropriate for this bill. I do not think it is appropriate to use tax money. Private contributions can be used for that purpose. Historical or otherwise, they want to leave it as I understand to a museum. My report says it is in the interest of national security. That is really a broad definition of national security, in my opinion.

I think that that provision and that program really should not be in a critical supplemental bill.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Would the gentleman repeat again what it was that we are spending for that is an urgent supplemental?

Mr. PURSELL. Well, if you read the report you will see an item in here for $2.5 million to be matched by local and State funds, I assume tax funds, too. So you could talk about $5 million plus to be used for restoring the Presidential yacht. The report says implying some reason for national security.

I do not see that as an emergency or a real crisis in this Nation using tax dollars for that purpose.

Mr. WALKER. I agree with the gentleman and I thank him for pointing it out.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I think that it is ironic that here on the House floor we have some Members acting as though somehow the administration's request is paramount.

The real problem is that the administration has failed to make the proper request in the past, particularly as it relates to the Customs Agency of this country. Funds for the Department of the Treasury and Customs were not properly requested in terms of the number of personnel we need. I sought, Mr. Chairman, as a Member of this body, to seek from the Appropriations Committee the appropriations necessary to properly staff our borders.

I think what has happened in this country as a result of the administration's requested cut, indeed, a request of 2,000 less personnel for our ports of entry around this Nation for fiscal year 1983, has been devastating. The administration succeeded with some 400 cuts in personnel and we are now at a stage in this country where the safety, the health and the welfare of those men and women who stand at our borders are currently in great danger.

I would only ask, Mr. Chairman, that this body give due consideration to an amendment which I do intend to offer which will authorize 154 additional personnel, only to bring the Agency back up to fiscal year 1981 levels. It will cost $450,000 for the 2 months left in this year.

I think it is proper for those who talk about and order, drug enforcement, and trade between nations, that the Members of this body see to it that this amendment passes, even though we do not yet have an authorization bill passed by the other body.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I will say that because of the overall situation, I will have to make a point of order if the amendment is offered, but I agree with the gentleman about the need. I hope the authorizing committee will get busy on the issue.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP].

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, one of the problems with this supplemental appropriation is that it almost totally ignores one of the most pressing U.S. foreign policy requirements in the world today, Central America. Out of a request of $634 million for economic development and security assistance, the committee, unwisely I believe cut $500 million.

I am going to offer an amendment to redress that stark deficiency. I understand that my amendment technically may be subject to a point of order later, but I wanted to take some time to a least explain to the committee one of the real problems that we have with this supplemental appropriations bill.

As I mentioned, the bill would cut $500 million out of a requested $634 million budget request for Central America. This is not just a broad brush rejection of the President's Central American package, it is a broad brush rejection of the heart of the bipartisan Kissinger Commission policy for Central America.

That bipartisan Commission upon which Mr. WRIGHT and I served, did not just recommend security assistance, they identified a pressing need for humanitarian aid, economic development, social, educational, medical, and political development moneys—all of which are cut starkly in this bill.

Moreover, this bill would reverse the policy course approved by the House just 2 months ago. Of course, there are differences in this body about what we should be doing in Central America, but it seems to me there can be no disagreement over the necessity of fulfilling the commitment that this House voted on just in May in the Broomfield-Murtha amendment to the authorization bill, which authorized the levels of funding requested in this bill, but rejected by the committee.

The election of Mr. Duarte in El Salvador was welcomed, I think, on a bipartisan basis by our colleagues here and in the other body. I think each and every one of us wants to do something to help implement the democratic reforms that not only are coming, but must continue to come in El Salvador.

But it is not just El Salvador that is at stake. Severe cuts were made in development and security assistance programs throughout the region, including Honduras and Costa Rica.

Costa Rica, without even an army, is pressed on its border by Nicaragua. They do not, as I repeat, have an army. They have a police force. It seems to me that whether it is Costa Rica with no army or Honduras, which is an ally, as is Costa Rica of the United States, these are areas of Central America that demand by this body in the supplemental with regard to security as well as economic and social development requirements.

I pointed out that this committee's recommendations are wholly inconsistent with the Jackson plan—the Jackson plan named after Senator Henry "Scoop" Jackson, at whose initiative the bipartisan Commission on Central America was constituted.

Let me give my colleagues a couple of ideas as to what the committee did and I think unfortunatley so.

Of the $197 million requested in military assistance, the committee recommended $24 million. $24 million out of a request of $197 million must of it urgently needed security assistance in El Salvador.

Of the $290 million requested in economic support funds, the committee only recommended $170 million of which $40 million of that was earmarked for the Dominican Republic, and $25 million was earmarked for African food relief.

I am not opposed to aid to the Dominican Republic. I am not opposed to African relief efforts. Indeed, we need to take steps in with regard to both those areas.

□ 1500

I have been in the forefront of attempting to give to Jamaica and the Dominican Republic and Haiti and other Caribbean countries, as well as Africa, badly needed economic assistance, but it should not come at the expense of Central America, especially not at this crucial time in the history of our hemisphere.

Of the $73 million requested in development assistance, the committee recommended zero.

Of the $1 million in the new Peace Corps Program for Central America, the committee recommended zero. Why would we cut the Peace Corps?

Frankly, I think the vast majority of the Members of the body think that the Peace Corps should be continued and that that modest request should be fulfilled.

To add to the problems of this bill, the subcommittee conditions its aid to Costa Rica, which is under threat from Nicaragua, we conditioned our aid to Costa Rica, upon receipt of a personal letter from the president of Costa Rica, that our aid not be used to expand its security force or to acquire any weapons.

I am not going to give any lengthy address on the subject on Costa Rica, but I would say to my colleagues, here is the jewel of democracy in Central America, tiny little Costa Rica, let us not treat them with such disdain that we ask for the types of conditions upon their aid that makes it almost impossible for them to save face and still accept U.S. foreign assistance.

I want to say, in conclusion, that I want to pay my respects to the chairman of my subcommittee for his efforts which are going on right now to get needed security assistance into Central America in the 1985 appropriation bill. That has been very welcome. Chairman LONG, your comments in the New York Times yesterday I think reflect the vast support in this body for a bipartisan approach to Central America and they were on target with regard to one concern for Mr. Duarte and the continuation of those democratic reforms that all of us want to see. I give the gentleman proper credit for the effort he has made to make changes in the human rights conditions in El Salvador and demand progress in Central America. As he knows, I have also been concerned and deeply involved in the issue of human rights in El Salvador, Nicaragua, and elsewhere in the region, as have other members of this subcommittee.

I would just hope that this supplemental can be repaired to the point where we can also take care of our 1984 obligations, not just put off our help until 1985. I will have an amendment to this end at the proper time, but I did want to take this time to at least address some of my immediate concerns.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LONG], the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge this Committee to support the committee's mark on this supplemental. The committee-passed bill is lean, fair, and balanced. The bill contains reductions in both economic and military aid, keeping in mind our precarious budget and deficit situation, while still providing for significant increases for fiscal year 1984 over the fiscal year 1983 funding levels.

The committee followed the guidelines traditionally used in regard to supplemental appropriations, that is, emergency conditions, a change in circumstances since the original appropriations were approved and a need for authorization. I believe each item in the bill meets these guidelines.

The issue in this supplemental is not one of support for President Duarte or even an issue of "nickel and diming" El Salvador. It is an issue of prudent expenditures which best effectuate our foreign policy goals. This administration, which stresses that throwing money at a problem is no solution, is proposing to do precisely that in Central America. By the time this supplemental is enacted, there will be probably less than 30 days left in the fiscal year, yet the administration is proposing to provide El Salvador with an additional $116 million in military assistance on top of the $62 million just appropriated in the emergency supplemental. This would result in a 300-percent increase in military assistance over fiscal year 1983 and is simply without any justifiable basis.

We are now currently marking up for fiscal year 1985 $126 million in military assistance and $170 million, I think, in economic assistance. That is plenty of money, believe me, to do our job, give them what they need to get along on but not so much that their generals can go rushing to Miami banks with it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to my good friend, the gentleman from San Diego, CA [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I simply want to rise to thank the committee for the concern that they have manifested in this bill for the problem that we have right now on the Mexican-California border immediately adjacent to San Diego. We do have raw sewage flowing into San Diego on a regular basis, and the $5 million that is included for the initial planning and design will allow us to at least initiate a solution to this problem that the people of San Ysidro, Imperial Beach, and the rest of the country have suffered for the last many years. We do have a severe health problem. We have had a quarantine of beaches on a regular basis. We want to give our heartfelt thanks to the committee for recognizing the problem and moving in such an expeditious manner.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to rise in support of the remarks of my subcommittee chairman on the foreign assistance title of this bill.

Mr. KEMP, I believe, left the impression that this committee has made deep cuts in foreign assistance under this bill. That is simply not the fact. We went across the board and took every item that we regarded as not being an emergency nature and simply knocked it our or reduced it.

We denied the funds for IDA. We denied the funds for the World Bank. We denied the funds for the economic accounts, including education and population, health and development accounts. We did not just limit military aid, we also took the economic aid and we limited it by as much as humanly possible, because we feel that this is a very tough time economically. We have only 2 months left in the fiscal year.

I want to point out that before you can consider supporting any amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to add further money to this bill, keep in mind that grant military assistance under this bill is already 56 percent above last year and 443 percent above 1981. For El Salvador, if you take economic support funds and military aid, this bill is already 238 percent above 1981 and 23 percent above last year.

For El Salvador, military aid alone, this bill is already 56 percent above last year and 257 percent above 1981. I think that is quite enough.

We have not singled out El Salvador for special treatment. We have not singled out Central America for special treatment. We have already provided $130 million in this bill for Central America.

Costa Rica is getting $60 million in economic aid; El Salvador is getting $25 million; Honduras, another $20 million. We provided military assistance to Costa Rica, to Honduras, to Panama, and for regional military training.

This bill is adequate for our needs at the present time. It, together with the bill now coming out of the committee, the 1985 regular bill, will provide all of the money that we need for foreign aid for this year.

I do not believe that we can explain to the folks back home or to each other why it is not sufficient to provide a bill which is already 56 percent above last year's level. I think that is quite enough, and I urge the Members to stick with the committee.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. I appreciate the gentleman yielding, and I rise to engage my chairman in a brief colloquy.

The Agricultural Research Service in Fresno, CA, has encountered a problem in which the lease on the existing property that they occupy will be running out at the end of this fiscal year. I am wondering if the chairman would have a suggestion as to how USDA could proceed to acquire property of the appropriate type in the timeframe that we have available. The chairman indicated to me earlier that he thought a lease-back possibility with a temporary rental agreement, with a reservation to purchase, might be a stronger approach than simply appropriating funds in this bill, and I am in agreement with him on that.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say that we will be going to conference on this bill. This may be a matter that could be clarified in conference and I certainly will look at it with that in mind. Usually a lease with option to purchase is the best approach. I appreciate the gentleman's question. We will see what we can do.

Mr. FAZIO. I appreciate the gentleman's willingness to resolve the issue in conference, and I look forward to working with him in that regard.

Mr. WHITTEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

□ 1510

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage in a colloquy with the chairman of the subcommittee. I thank the chairman for his patience and indulgence. If I may, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky several questions about the bill's provisions on the epidemic of acquired immune deficiency syndrome [AIDS].

I know that the gentleman and the subcommittee he chairs have worked diligently on dealing with this dangerous disease. I know that the Appropriations Committee has tried several times to get accurate and up-to-date estimates on the amount of money that the Public Health Service estimates is needed to do basic epidemiology and research.

When the Secretary of HHS, Mrs. Heckler, announced the discovery of a virus that probably causes the disease, the Department also promised to evaluate its research and public health needs and to report these needs to the Congress. The Public Health Service completed that study in May of this year, estimating that $20 million more is needed in 1984, and that an additional $35 million would be needed in 1985. I will include that estimate for the record.

It is my understanding that in the 10 weeks since the study was completed, the Public Health Service's recommendations have not yet been reviewed by HHS or OMB. During just the time since the Public Health Service finished its work, more than 600 people have died and at least 1,200 more have been diagnosed.

Has the gentleman from Kentucky received a new recommendation from HHS for the funding necessary to do public health work, develop a vaccine against the new virus, or do basic research?

Mr. NATCHER. We have not received the Department's recommendation up to this time.

Mr. WAXMAN. I had intended to offer an amendment to this bill and to the appropriations bill for 1985 to increase funding to the level requested by the Assistant Secretary for Health and the Public Health Service. Since these recommendations have not been received, however, I assume that many Members would feel it necessary to await the administration's proposals and official position.

I will not offer the amendments today, but I would ask the gentleman

if the committee intends to review the needs for additional AIDS research funding if and when the administration does make further recommendations?

Mr. NATCHER. We will, of course, review HHS's requests carefully.

As the gentleman from California knows, and the gentleman has certainly worked with our subcommittee all down through the years, not only on this particular matter, but on others. We have in this supplemental, as the gentleman knows, $1,750,000 for Center for Disease Control for AIDS. In addition, $6,550,000 for the National Institutes of Health. That, Mr. WAXMAN, as you know, added to the $47,595,000 already available for 1984, provides a total of $55,895,000 for work on this disease. The 1985 bill, which we have just passed, includes an increase over the budget of $3,350,000 for the Centers for Disease Control for work on AIDS. The 1985 budget request included $54,000,000 for this purpose, according the testimony which we received in our hearings. In addition, our 1985 bill includes an increase over the budget of more than $505,000,000 for the National Institutes of Health. This should provide NIH with a substantial increase for research on AIDS.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for that comment. I want to point out to my colleagues that the money that is in this bill for this purpose of dealing with this very dreaded disease is at the insistence of the Members of the Congress itself, and particularly under the leadership of our colleague, Congressman ROYBAL from California. It is notwithstanding the fact that the administration has not made a request for the funds that should be available for this purpose, even after the researches, scientists, and the Public Health Service have made specific recommendations. This delay is inexcusable.

[Memorandum]

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,

Washington, DC, May 25, 1984.

To: The Secretary.

From: Edward N. Brandt, Jr., M.D., Assistant Secretary for Health.

Subject: Proposed FY 1984 Supplemental and FY 1985 Amendment for Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome.

For nearly three years the Public Health Service has led the fight against the relatively new but extremely serious public health problem known as Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome or AIDS. As a result of the efforts of many people within the PHS and scientists in laboratories throughout the world you were recently able to report some significant breakthroughs. These include the discovery of the virus HTLV-III, the probable cause of AIDS, the development of a process to mass-produce this virus and that of a blood test for AIDS.

These exciting discoveries bring us much closer to the detection, prevention and treatment of AIDS. There is much left to do. As of April 23, the date on which you announced the AIDS virus discovery, there had been reported a total of 4,177 cases of AIDS with 1,807 deaths in 45 States, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico. This represents a mortality rate of 43 percent which is clearly unacceptable. In order to seize the opportunities which the recent breakthroughs have provided us we will need additional funds both for the remainder of this fiscal year and for FY 1985. Although I realize that general policy would discourage supplemental and amendment requests at this time, I believe that the unique situation with respect to AIDS justifies our forwarding the requests at this time.

Attached is a table summarizing the additional funds needed. For Fiscal Year 1984 we are requesting a supplemental appropriation of $20,076,000 and 4 FTEs and for Fiscal Year 1985 we are asking for an additional amount of $35,809,000 and 37 FTEs. Summaries of the needs of the four PHS agencies involved and justifications for the additional funds requested are also attached.

I ask your favorable consideration of the PHS proposals and respectfully request you forward it to the Office of Management and Budget.

CENTERS FOR DISEASE CONTROL ADDITIONAL AIDS RESOURCES FOR FISCAL YEARS 1984 AND 1985

SUPPLEMENTAL FUNDING FOR AIDS ACTIVITIES FOLLOWING THE IDENTIFICATION OF THE PROBABLE ETIOLOGIC AGENT

On April 23, 1984, Secretary Heckler announced that the probable cause of AIDS has been found and a new process developed to mass produce the virus. Isolation of the probable etiologic agent of AIDS will greatly assist prevention efforts because for the first time it affords the opportunity to characterize the agent in detail and understand its behavior.

AIDS projects currently underway will be expanded and refined and new projects will be initiated in the areas of laboratory investigations, surveillance, and epidemiologic studies. Special emphasis will be placed on technology transfer and information dissemination, and programs on disease prevention and control will accelerate rapidly.

Now that the probable etiologic agent of AIDS has been identified, other urgent questions need to be answered. Information will be required on the pathogenesis of the disease, the possible contribution of other agents, and the nature and the natural history of the HTLV-III virus. The isolation of the etiologic agent should now make it possible to identify transmitters, develop and evaluate the usefulness of specific diagnostic and screening tests for AIDS in donors and plasma, therapeutic measures, and biological products and vaccines for prevention; and to transfer these techniques and products and the knowledge to use them appropriately to the medical and public health communities. Laboratory and epidemiologic studies based upon these specific tests should further and more precisely define the modes of AIDS transmission and lead to implementation of strategies to interrupt and control the disease. For the first time, it will be possible to establish that controls are truly uninfected with AIDS agents.

Laboratory technology which resulted in the isolation of the AIDS agent will make it possible to isolate other previously unknown related agents. Characterization of these agents and determination of their clinical and epidemiologic significance will be important.

1. Improve laboratory diagnosis of retroviruses, determine their pathogenetic mechanisms, institute technology transfers and initiate basic studies for vaccine development	3.38/1.25	$1,700,000
2. Determine the prevalence of retrovirus antibody and viremia in various populations, including homosexual men, I.V. drug users, Haitians, hemophiliacs, and volunteer blood donors in the U.S. Lymphadenopathy syndrome cases will be included		130,000
3. Expand investigation of transfusion-associated cases/donors	3.75/1.5	468,700
4. Expand international epidemiologic investigations (Zaire, other)	1.56/0.63	245,400
5. Expand epidemiologic studies of AIDS in families to include additional study sites and pediatric cases	.31/0.12	187,300
6. Expand laboratory data acquisition, analysis, presentation, retrieval and storage of AIDS patient materials		31,250
7. Improve diagnosis and treatment of opportunistic infections: a. Bacterial (including M. avium, M.tb, Legionella); b. Parasitic (including pneumocystis carinii, Cryptosporidium); c. Viral (including Herpes viruses); d. Mycotic (including Candida, Aspergillus, Cryptococcus)		437,350
Total resources needed	9/3.5	3,200,000

ADDITIONAL AIDS RESOURCES NEEDS (AMENDMENT), FISCAL YEAR 1985

Project	Pos./FTE's	Funds
1. Improve laboratory diagnosis of retroviruses, determine their pathogenetic mechanisms, institute technology transfers and initiate basic studies for vaccine development	3.43	$800,000
2. Determine the prevalence of retrovirus antibody and viremia in various U.S. populations, including persons from various regions of Africa, India, China, and the Caribbean. Lymphadenopathy syndrome cases will be included		225,000
3. Expand investigation of transfusion-associated cases/donors	5	730,000
4. Expand International epidemiologic investigations (Zaire, other)	2.86	375,000
5. Expand epidemiologic studies of AIDS and lymphadenopathy syndrome in families to include additional study sites and pediatric cases	.71	415,000
6. Expand laboratory data acquisition, analysis, presentation, retrieval and storage of AIES patient materials		170,000
7. Improve diagnosis and treatment of opportunistic infections: a. Bacterial (including M. avium, M.tb, Legionella); b. Parasitic (including pneumocystis carinii, Cryptosporidium); c. Viral (including Herpes viruses); d. Mycotic (including Candida, Aspergillus, Cryptococcus)		245,000
8. Conduct study of sexual partners of homosexual AIDS patients in Boston to determine transmission risk factors		165,000
9. Develop rapid reporting AIDS surveillance network using microcomputers in selected State/local health departments	.62	80,000
10. Expand existing cooperative agreements with State/local health departments to include risk reduction (information/education) programs for high risk groups	1.88	2,500,000
11. Enhance cooperation with national Hemophilia foundation to acquire hemophilia patient specimens and medical history data and to disseminate up-to-date information to hemophilia treatment clinics		125,000
12. Define the complete spectrum of AIDS including lymphadenopathy syndrome cases, through active reviews of tumor registries and identification and follow-up of cases with prodromal signs/symptoms suggestive of AIDS	1.88	270,000
13. Expand the number of surveillance cooperative agreements to include an additional 3–5 State/local health departments that have reported a significant number of AIDS cases	.62	460,000
14. Expand cooperative agreement with U.S. Conference of Mayors to provide a broader network for an information interchange system of city governments and local health departments		140,000
15. Expand laboratory space for Viral Disease by adding two floors to the Virology Laboratory currently under design		4,500,000
Total resources required	17	11,200,000

ALCOHOL, DRUG ABUSE, AND MENTAL HEALTH ADMINISTRATION: ADDITIONAL AIDS RESOURCES FOR FISCAL YEARS 1984 AND 1985

AIDS SUPPLEMENTAL FISCAL YEAR 1984

The Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration is requesting a supplemental appropriation in FY 1984 to support research on the psychological and behavioral factors related to AIDS victims and the relationship of AIDS to drug use. These studies will require the following additional amounts in FY 1984.

National Institute of Mental Health	$375,000
National Institute on Drug Abuse	800,000
Total	$1,175,000

Some of the research investigations to be supported include the following:

National Institute of Mental Health

Research studies aimed at increasing knowledge about the psychological and behavioral factors which increase vulnerability among at-risk populations and AIDS patients; psychoimmunologic and neuroendocrinologic studies examining the effects of stress on the immune system.

Retrospective and prospective studies focusing on psychosocial and behavioral factors associated with the development of symptomatic mental health reaction in AIDS patients and members of high risk groups. Included in this area are: risk-assessment studies to refine procedures for differentiating which individuals with AIDS or in high risk populations are likely to experience emotional disturbance or psychological dysfunction; studies examining the relationship between social, behavioral, and psychological factors and the course and prognosis of the illness.

Funds would also be used to supplement large scale prospective cohort studies now being funded by NCI or NIAID to obtain psychological and behavioral data relative to AIDS patients or populations at high risk for AIDS.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON DRUG ABUSE

The study initiated in FY 1983 will be expanded to include a second component of 200 homosexual AIDS patients who do or do not use drugs. The researchers will investigate the causal or modifying relationship of drug use among homosexuals in the development of AIDS.

The second year of this study was to include two additional substudies: (1) a group of 40 drug-users who are imprisoned on various charges and who acquire AIDS. Detailed questionaires on lifestyle and drug-use, medical histories, immunologic function, and other predictive factors will be measured. This group is unique in that they did not seek out treatment and may have unique variables—types of drug used, disease acquired, extent of disease; and (2) a followup study designed based on the cohort studies of the drug abuse populations. These studies will focus on changes in the individual's health to see what relationships exist between AIDS and immunological status, virological profile, drug abuse life style or other identified factors. These will include a proportionate representation of the above studied group.

A study to examine the influence of marijuana components on both hormonal and cellular immune responses in vivo and in vitro. For example, antibody formation by immune splenocytes or skin graft reactions, lymphocyte blastogenic responses, and lymphokine production.

A study of the effects of narcotics on the immune system. This group is investigating the ability of lymphocytes of addicts as compared to normal subjects to form rosettes, the extent and duration of any alteration, mechanism of this effect and any genetic factors involved. This is an attempt to determine immunological changes resulting from narcotic and other drug use.

The overall objective of another application will be to assess the potential immunosuppressive effects of marijuana smoke through measures of dose-related increases in susceptibility to microbial infection and tumor growth in rats receiving marijuana smoke. Resistance to systematic as well as to localized infections will be assessed.

A proposed case-comparison study of AIDS patients with a history of intravenous heroin and cocaine use is ready to begin this summer. The purpose of this study is to attempt to quantify the risk factors associated with neede-sharing and AIDS. In addition, an attempt will be made to quantify the risk factor of the spouse and children living with needle-sharers. Physical examination and immunochemistries will be used to assess health changes during the study.

A comparative registry analysis from the Treatment Outcome Prospective Study (TOPS), the Bronx, and New York City to determine the presence of previously treated methadone clients among the patients listed in the AIDS registries currently maintained by New York City, other states and CDC will be attempted. This analysis will provide a preliminary determination of the association between long-term heroin and other parental drug use with the appearance of AIDS.

The next followup wave of TOPS provides an opportunity to conduct immunochemistry and clinical chemistry studies on patients with varying drug use patterns in geographically disparate cities. This study will be the first nationally based study to determine normative values for the more recently developed virological studies like HTLV among drug abusers. Attempts will be made to correlate the findings of this study with the clustering of AIDS in certain portions of the country. In addition, the presence and recurrence of other viral infections like herpes can be analyzed in terms of drug use patterns. The hypothesis that several of the psychoactive substances may have immunosuppressive effects can be tested in a naturalistic setting.

AIDS AMENDMENT, FISCAL YEAR 1985

The Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration is requesting a budget amendment in FY 1985 to continue efforts begun in FY 1984 that were made possible by the proposed supplemental. The amounts requested are as follow:

National Institute of Mental Health	$425,000
National Institute on Drug Abuse	397,000
Total	822,000

The activities are described below:

National Institute of Mental Health—Continuation cost of work begun in 1984.

National Institute on Drug Abuse—Continuation cost of work begun in 1984.

FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION: ADDITIONAL AIDS RESOURCES FOR FISCAL YEARS 1984 AND 1985

FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION FISCAL YEAR 1984 AND 1985 SUPPLEMENTAL FUNDING FOR AIDS ACTIVITIES

Given FDA's fundamental authorities for licensing biological products and approving new drugs, as well as responsibility for assuring the safety of the national blood supply, there is no question that the agency will be heavily involved in dealing with AIDS for a long time, regardless of the precise nature of the drugs and vaccines that are eventually developed. It will be necessary to grow sufficient quantities of the virus and pursue a number of approaches involving both monoclonal antibody and recombinant DNA technology. Methods and animal models for evaluating candidate vaccines as well as diagnostic tests must be developed. Subsequently possible vaccines and treatment, will be evaluated, screening tests developed and refined, and standards set for licensing the products that will be developed. At the same time, in order to facilitate development and approval of these products, the FDA must continue research on the immunological factors involved and stay abreast of the research conducted both within and outside the government.

The FDA request includes different levels of funding in FY 1984, FY 1985, and FY 1986. The requested Supplemental Appropriation in FY 1984 is for $2,600,000 for the facility renovations and equipment necessary to expand AIDS work. The provision of these funds in FY 1984 will enable the agency to begin immediately to prepare the necessary high-containment laboratories. However, if these funds cannot be made available by July 1, 1984, the request would have to be revised to include this amount in FY 1985, since the funds could not be obligated by the end of FY 1984. The intent is to renovate several current animal rooms in Building 29A on the NIH campus into high-containment rooms needed for the AIDS work. This would require the agency to move existing animals out and contract for the maintenance of these animals.

The FY 1985 request totals $5,750,000. Of this amount $2,500,000 consists of one-time costs. The amount of $2,000,000 is for contracts to assess the impact on the national blood supply if those who are screened as positive for the AIDS agent are excluded from further donation, and to assess the past and current exposure to the AIDS agent by hemophiliacs who receive Anti-Hemophiliac Factor made from pooled plasma. The other $500,000 is for the one-time cost of moving the animals out of the space to be renovated in Building 29A and establishing a new location for them.

In addition to the one-time investment, the continuing needs are estimated at $3,250,000 the amount needed to meet operating needs for FY 1985. This amount would support 11 professional scientists using the IPA mechanism, 20 FTE staff years, and the cost of contracting for the animal support currently located in the space to be used for the AIDS work. While it is intended to use the IPA route as much as possible, 20 FTEs will be needed for technical and other support staff. This is essential because it is believed that 11 is probably the maximum number of IPAs which could be recruited, with the balance of the staff to be government employees.

Food and Drug Administration: Summary of increased resources necessary for work on AIDS

Fiscal year 1984 supplemental:
Facility renovations	$950,000
Equipment	1,650,000
Total	[1] 2,600,000
Fiscal year 1985 budget amendment:
Contracts relating to the safety of the national blood supply and protection of hemophiliacs	2,000,000
Contract for maintenance of animals currently located in the space to be renovated for AIDS work	1,150,000
Professional scientists under IPA's	1,100,000
Intramural FTE's (20)	1,500,000
Total	5,750,000
Fiscal year 1986 impact:
Contract for maintenance of animals	650,000
Scientists under IPA's	1,100,000
Intramural FTE's (20)	1,500,000
Total	3,250,000

[1] This request is contingent on fiscal year 1984 funds being made available by July 1, 1984 if the funds are to be obligated by September 30, 1984. If funding cannot become available by July 1, this amount of $2,600,000 would have to be added to the fiscal year 1985 request.

NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH: ADDITIONAL AIDS RESOURCES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1984 AND 1985

AIDS AMENDMENT, FISCAL YEAR 1985

The NIH is requesting a budget amendment for fiscal year 1985 to continue the efforts begun in fiscal year 1984 that were made possible by the proposed supplemental and to initiate some new effort. The amounts requested are as follows:

National Cancer Institute	$7,900,000
National Institute of Dental Research	295,000
National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases	8,942,000
Division of Research Resources	900,000
Total, NIH	18,038,000

The activities of the various Institutes are described below.

National Cancer Institute

Continuation costs of work begun in 1984.

Expanded effort in blood testing, HTLV III production, vaccine development, and SAIDS research.

National Institute of Dental Research

Continuation costs of work begun in 1984.

Expanded effort made possible by major equipment purchases.

National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases

Continuation costs of efforts initiated in 1984.

Evaluation of immune abnormalities in AIDS through the analysis of cell surface markers and correlative studies of cell activation and function.

Extension of ongoing study at NIH in epidemic cities to study possible HTLV III infections in health care workers.

Collaborative therapy trials of AIDS using standard protocols and the central data analysis center.

Clinical study on the use of alpha interferon for treating pre-AIDS and/or preventing development of AIDS.

Division of Research Resources

Continuation costs of efforts initiated in 1984 at the Regional Primate Research Centers.

AIDS SUPPLEMENTAL FY 1984

The NIH is requesting additional funds in FY 1984 to support expanded research made possible by the isolation of a new human retrovirus described as the probable causative factor of AIDS. This breakthrough has provided us with the knowledge to increase our efforts against AIDS, efforts that will require the following additional amounts in FY 1984:

National Cancer Institute	$3,900,000
National Institute of Dental Research	81,000
National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases	8,330,000
Division of Research Resources	790,000
Total, NIH	13,101,000

Some of the areas that have opened as avenues for increased efforts are described below, by Institute.

National Cancer Institute

Further work on human cell lines that produce large amounts of HTLV III, including further development needed to mass-produce the material necessary for blood screening tests.

Development of rapid immunological assays to detect infection.

Accelerated efforts to produce a vaccine to prevent AIDS and to develop other ways to halt its development.

Expanded search for a safe, effective therapy for AIDS and its related diseases.

Expansion of a contract that provides the prime source for HTLV III production, the entire early scale-up into fermentation, and the transfer after exponential expansion into the for-profit sector for testing blood for antibodies.

Maintenance of production of HTLV III for primate models and vaccine development.

Supplementation of existing grants, particularly studies involving simian AIDS.

National Institute of Dental Research

Expanded investigations concerning the role of monocyte abnormalities in AIDS.

Studies on the epidemiology, transmission, and possible etiologic agent of AIDS in Zaire.

Modification and expansion of contracts dealing with specimen storage and distribution.

Development of a laboratory for the growth and study of a unique fungus, Thermoaacus crustaceus, which has been found in the blood of some AIDS patients.

Expanded studies of cryptosporidiosis, a serious opportunistic infection seen in AIDS patients and one that is now poorly understood, difficult to diagnose, and has no suitable treatment.

Research on the severe and even life-threatening diarrhea that affects AIDS patients.

Development of surrogate tests, particularly interferon production, to predict AIDS.

Expanded efforts in studies on the immunological defects in AIDS.

Additional AIDS public education programs in several major metropolitan cities throughout the United States where AIDS is statistically emerging.

Studies of Salmonella sepsis and related infectious complications in AIDS patients.

Division of Research Resources

Epidemiological studies at the Regional Primate Research Centers, using methods similar to those employed with AIDS patients, to detect the virus in the primate colonies.

Development of an antiserum to permit rapid, reliable field detection of AIDS and AIDS-carriers in the Centers' primate colonies.

Tests of the pathogenicity of retrovirus strains associated with human leukemia and AIDS.

Development of a vaccine to immunize nonhuman primates against AIDS.

Searches into the mechanisms of bost immune defense against opportunistic organisms that colonize the oral cavity.

National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases

Investigations of polyamine inhibitors to attempt to control cytomegalovirus infections in AIDS, since other virus infections may be co-factors that allow the HTLV III virus to express itself clinically.

Research on seven specific opportunistic microorganisims as they relate to the life-threatening infections in AIDs patients, including basic biology of the organisms, mechanisms of pathogenesis, virulence factors, immunogens and immunopathology, immunotherapy, and immune prophylaxis.

Implementation of a multi-institutional clinical trial of Dapsone in AIDS patients with Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia; Dapsone is a drug licensed for use against leprosy and certain skin conditions, and which has been found to be effective in rats against P. carinii pneumonia.

New studies on the biology, pathogenesis, and prevalence of Cryptosporidium; analysis of human cytomegalovirus; herpes simplex virus and leukocyte interactions in AIDS; and the antimicrobial susceptibility of P. carinii.

Testing among potential AIDS victims (identified under an ongoing contract) for exposure and response to the newly reported BTLV III agent.

Investigations of immune derangements in drug addicted parents and their children.

Injection of HTLV-III virus and Lymphadenopathy Associated Virus (LAV) into chimpanzees in attempts to produce AIDS in experimental animals.

Establishment of a laboratory to culture candidate AIDS retrovirus.

Establishment of a vaccine development facility to produce candidate vaccines using the techniques of oligonucleotide and peptide synthesis as well as insertional cloning procedures in vaccinia virus.

Development of a new chimpanzee facility to study the transmission of HTLV III and to establish a model for protection as well as a model to investigate factors that produce susceptibility such as T helper cell activation.

IMPACT OF ADDITIONAL FUNDING IN 1984-85 ON THE 1986 REQUEST

Continuation costs of the proposed AIDS supplemental in 1984 and budget amendment in 1985 are projected to have the following impact in 1986:

National Cancer Institute	$8,400,000
National Institute of Dental Research	222,000
National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease	8,763,000
Division of Research Resources	941,000
Total, NIH	18,326,000

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill.

This supplemental appropriation, H.R. 6040, is another budget buster.

The bill breaches our 1984 budget authority ceiling by $1.4 billion. No budget act point of order lies against the bill because of bad language in the budget resolution.

No one denies the aggregate limit has been exceeded, yet we cannot make a point of order.

Of the $5.4 billion in this urgent supplemental, we provide $5 million to refurbish the Presidential yacht, Potomack, and several million to provide a place to watch the affects of the Johnstown flood.

This bill is rife with such chauvinistic projects, which, while worthy, are by no means urgent. It ought to be soundly defeated. If not, it ought to be vetoed.

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to see the swift action which the Committee on Appropriations has taken to consider the urgent needs of the Veterans' Administration contained in the second supplemental appropriations bill for 1984. I want to commend the chairman of the committee, Mr. WHITTEN; the ranking minority member, Mr. CONTE, and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee dealing with veterans' matters, Mr. GREEN, for their concern for our Nation's veterans. I would also like to take a moment to especially praise the chairman of the Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies, Mr. BOLAND, for the action taken by his subcommittee on the supplemental request by the Veterans' Administration. Chairman BOLAND has a well-deserved reputation for looking out for veterans' interests, and I think this measure provides additional evidence, although none was needed, of his continuing commitment to serving veterans.

Mr. Chairman, the Office of Management and Budget held back the VA's request for supplemental funding for veterans' programs for a long time—almost 2 months I believe. Knowing the revolving fund for VA's home loan program was depleted, OMB waited months before submitting the VA's urgent request as part of a governmentwide request. I am disturbed that this vital supplemental request languished at OMB while the merit of other, less urgent, requests was debated. As a result of this unwise strategy, the VA's Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund ran out of money last week. The VA was literally in the process of closing the loan guaranty program down until permission was granted to temporarily transfer funds from other accounts to continue operations. It would have created many hardships for veterans and many other people had the agency been required to shut down the home loan program.

Most informed people knew the VA's Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund, which supports the very successful GI home loan program, would run out of money this year without supplemental funding. Everyone who had looked at the figures knew this. Our committee knew it in February. Over 2 months ago, on May 22, 1984, I wrote to Mr. Stockman and urged him to submit the VA's supplemental funding request without further delay. In that letter I said, "allowing the VA Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund to run out of money would not only affect the integrity of a program which has benefited millions of veterans while at the same time boosting the economy, but it would affect the very credibility of the U.S. Government."

An administration proposal based on a Grace Commission recommendation was submitted to Congress earlier this year in order to delay in my view, the need to request additional funding for this program. The proposal did not address the underlying problem of long-term self-sufficiency, and would have created more serious financial problems for veterans home loan programs 2 to 3 years from now. Our committee and the House rejected the administration's plan. Instead, we adopted a reform package similar to a proposal suggested by the Congressional Budget Office that will put the program on a more sound financial basis although substantial appropriations will be required in fiscal year 1985. This provision is now part of Public Law 98-369.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to briefly note and commend the committee's actions in increasing the pay supplemental for the VA medical care account by $40 million. The Appropriations Committee action is a signal during a time of uncertainty about the future of VA health care that we, in the Congress, will not shirk our commitment to the veterans of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I want to again express my appreciation to the chairman of the committee and all members of the committee for the attention they have given to appropriate much-needed funds to supplement various VA accounts in this bill.●

● Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, chapter VI, the Interior chapter of the second supplemental bill for fiscal year 1984, contains $633,026,000 in new budget authority, an increase of $43,885,000 above the amounts requested by the Department of the Interior. In addition, the committee rescinded $30,000,000 in contract authority.

One of the committee's major initiatives is to provide $459,190,000, the fiscal year 1985 administration request, to assure that funds are made available to award a major construction contract at Big Hill, TX. This will keep construction of additional permanent storage capacity on schedule. I might add that this is the final permanent construction storage site of the strategic petroleum reserve. In addition, report language was included which directs that any proposed changes to appropriation levels to adjust the distribution capacity must not be done at the expense of the development of expansion of permanent storage capacity.

Funds not budgeted by the Department of the Interior in the amount of $5.3 million are provided for basic unemployment compensation. The Congress provided in Public Law 96-499, the 1980 Reconciliation Act that each individual department would be required to budget for these benefits. This action was taken with the hope that the departments affected would be more aggressive in challenging claims. Formerly, the Department of Labor budgeted for all departments; $94.5 million was included for fire suppression costs for the Bureau of Land Management, the Fish and Wildlife Service, the National Park Service, and the Forest Service.

As in past years, the committee rejected efforts by the administration, to close seven fish hatcheries, which, in the opinion of the committee, continue to provide beneficial resource services, particularly in the area of research. Under the National Park Service account approximately $5.7 million is provided for priority construction projects.

Additionally unbudgeted amounts added for BLM, Forest and Wildlife Service and the National Park Service permits continuation of summer seasonal employment and procurement and maintenance as provided in the 1984 bill. Reductions made in the Office of the Secretary, the Inspector General, the Solicitor, the Commission on Fine Arts, and the National Gallery of Art are due to vacancies and large unobligated balances in the apportioned allocations as of March 31, 1984.

The balance of the Interior chapter funds $17 million under the BIA account for acquisition of temporary water supplies for the Ak Chin Indian community, $3.6 million for Indian education grants and teacher training programs, and $2.44 million for various health and administrative programs for the Northern Marianas.

Our chapter provides cuts where we could and makes available additional funds where it was deemed necessary. I believe it deserves our support.●

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my enthusiastic support of the fiscal year 1985 Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Act, which recommends a total of $96.147 billion for the Federal agencies which provide critical employment and training, health and human services, and educational benefits to the people of this Nation. The fiscal year 1985 Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill is vital legislation—not only because it extends a lifeline to millions of poor, disadvantaged, and elderly Americans, but also because directly or indirectly this bill touches the lives of nearly every American. And so, I want to take this opportunity to thank my distinguished friend and colleague, Congressman BILL NATCHER, for his able leadership, sensitivity, and compassion in crafting a bill which is fiscally responsive, yet fair in addressing the real needs of people who are served through this legislation. I take great pleasure in joining with Chairman NATCHER and my other colleagues on the Labor-HHS-Education Subcommittee in presenting to the House a bill over which we labored long and hard. I strongly recommend it to you.

In the area of employment and training, the bill includes $3.85 billion for the Job Training Partnership Act. At a time when 8 million Americans are still unemployed and thousands of families are struggling to make ends meet, creating job opportunities and skill development among the structurally unemployed, our youth, and displaced workers must remain a high national priority. While I personally would support even higher appropriations for programs to train people and put them to work, I am delighted that the fiscal year 1985 Labor-HHS-Education Act, H.R. 6028 includes $825 million for the Summer Youth Employment Program—$100 million more than was requested—and $600 million for the Job Corps Program. These programs have broadened the horizons and created a sense of self worth for thousands of disadvantaged teenagers who are now productive and capable members of their respective communities. I would hope that in conference with the Senate on this bill that the highest possible funding levels can be sustained for these two programs which have a documented record of success.

A major portion of the fiscal year 1985 Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill is devoted to health care research, services and prevention programs which are vital to the well-being and quality of life for millions of Americans.

Unfortunately, recommendations for several areas in which I am intensely interested—the Health Manpower Training and Education Programs and the health block grants—are deferred in this bill until the necessary authorizing legislation is finalized. I strongly encourage this body to take swift action to finalize this legislation, so that increased appropriations may be considered and acted upon for the training of doctors and other health professionals, aid to minority health professions schools, and health care services for mothers and children.

For programs which are authorized, I believe that the recommendations in the Labor-HHS-Education bill are sound and a wise investment in the health of this Nation. For example, the bill includes an additional $599 million, a 14-percent increase above last year's budget, for the National Institutes of Health [NIH]. These funds are desperately needed now for continued excellence and progress in combatting cancer, diabetes, stroke, heart disease, and the other medical disorders which debilitate our Nation with devastating social and economic consequences.

Once again, recent reports have revealed that black and minority Americans still suffer poorer health status, live shorter lives, endure tragic rates of infant mortality, high blood pressure, cancer, stroke, blindness, et cetera. During our subcommittee hearings this year, testimony was presented which starkly highlighted the need for comprehensive and accelerated action to address this shocking and alarming situation. Therefore, the bill includes $20 million in new resources for the National Institutes of Health to enhance and expand ongoing research on health problems of particular importance to black and other minority Americans.

A central component of this greatly needed initiative will be the establishment of NIH research centers of excellence at graduate black colleges, which possess a creative pool of research talent that for too long has been neglected. The new minority research centers funded under this bill will contribute new ideas and fresh insight into the minority health problems confronting this Nation. The subcommittee intends that these new resources supplement—rather than supplant—research and research training activities currently funded at these institutions.

Finally, I would like to bring to your attention the $17.91 billion included in this bill for the Department of Education—an amount which is fully $2.473 billion more in Federal resources than was provided last year for our Nation's education.

These funds are a critical investment in the future of this country and are greatly needed to stem the deterioration in education services which has occurred over the past 3 years. Without the approval of these additional resources, more students will be squeezed out of the highly successful chapter I program, school districts will be financially unable to reach out and identify new handicapped students who need special educational services, and fewer college students will be able to obtain adequate financial aid.

In 1983, the Report of the President's Commission on Excellence in Education, "A Nation at Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform," examined the quality of American education and found it sorely lacking. Mr. Chairman, our Nation's educational system is failing to tap and fully develop a significant pool of human talent. We have a tremendous wealth of talent and intellectual ability and ingenuity in our young people which is being wasted.

If the Federal Government is going to assume a leadership and principal role in implementing actions to improve excellence in education and ensure equality of educational opportunity for all, then the necessary resources must be provided. In my opinion, the resources provided in H.R. 6028 represent a major step in addressing the educational needs of students who are disadvantaged, of limited English speaking ability, or handicapped—the very students identified in the "A Nation at Risk" report as being most at risk. The resources provided in H.R. 6028 represent a public commitment toward moving public education forward and I urge your wholehearted support of these funds.

In closing, I would like to reiterate my endorsement of the fiscal year 1985 Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Act. The programs funded in this bill provide some of the most important services upon which the people of this Nation rely. H.R. 6028 corrects many of the wrongs which were presented to us by the administration and I hope that you will join me in voting for this important legislation.●

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the second supplemental appropriations bill as a necessary increase in funds for a number of vital programs.

I support the extra money for food stamps, for veteran's programs, for federally assisted housing, and funding for handicapped research.

I also support the appropriations for the Army Corps of Engineers. This bill appropriates funds for a vital project at Revere Beach in my district. The damage done by flooding at Revere is serious and needs to be addressed. The money appropriated by this bill will help arrest the threat of flood damage at Revere and I strongly urge the Corps of Engineers to move forward on this vital project.

I commend the committee chairman and my dear friend and colleague, SILVIO CONTE, for bringing this balanced and necessary bill to the floor at this time. I urge my colleagues to support the measure.●

● Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, while I believe that our committee has erred in excluding the vast majority of the President's request for Central America, I urge my colleagues to support an important item that is included in the bill, humanitarian assistance for Miskito and other Nicaraguan Indians. There is still a pressing need for this $7.5 million in aid among the 33,000 Indians who have been displaced from their homes by the Sandinista government.

I offered this amendment in the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations after meeting with Steadman Fagoth, leader of the Miskito Indians, and after seeing shocking photographs taken by Louisianians who went to Honduras to distribute privately financed food and medical supplies. The photos showed Indian children living in substandard camps and suffering from malnutrition, parasitic infections, and lack of clothing. Mr. Chairman, these pictures were heartbreaking illustrations that 100 children are dying every month, and that perhaps 2,000 or 3,000 more will die by the end of the rainy season unless we add to the private sector donations currently available.

As of early June, there was no food at all for these refugees, despite the fact that one person can be fed for only $15 per month. The living conditions are terrible. The four camps operated by the Sandinistas inside Nicaragua were described by the Miskitos and those who went to assist them as virtual concentration camps. And while those operated in Honduras by the U.N. High Commissioner on Refugees were better, they still were not up to the task. The Miskitos felt that the U.N. camps were a threat to their lives, and that the U.N. officials cooperated too closely with the hostile Sandinista government. That is supported by a subsequent—July 23, 1984—report of the Heritage Foundation, "Are United Nations Camps Cheating Refugees in Honduras?"

Mr. Chairman, this bill corrects that situation and provides $7.5 million for food, medicine and medical care, clothing, temporary shelter, and transportation for supplies and personnel. The funding has been authorized by the Congress and is to be administered by the U.S. Agency for International Development independent of U.N. relief agencies. No funds are to go to the Sandinista government, and none are to support any activities against that government.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this vital assistance. This Congress has been very responsible in holding hearings on this major problem in the past, and reports from recent congressional trips to the area indicate that the problem is just as pressing today. I hope, therefore, that we will now act to provide this modest sum for humanitarian relief.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.●

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter I of title I of the bill.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter I be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against chapter I?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter II.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter II be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against chapter II?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter III.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter III be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against chapter III?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order against material in chapter III.

The portion of the bill to which the point of order relates is as follows:

None of the funds available to the Department of Defense may be used for the floating storage or transportation of petroleum or petroleum products unless such storage or transportation is accomplished in vessels documented and built in the United States, in accordance with 10 U.S.C. 2631 and 46 U.S.C. 1241.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is against lines 7 through 12 on page 14, that the language constitutes legislation on an appropriations bill and therefore violates clause 2 of rule XXI. The rule is well known to this committee. This section prohibits the use of funds for the floating storage or transportation of petroleum or petroleum products unless shipped or stored on vessels documented and built in the United States.

The language requires additional duties and functions not authorized under existing law, and therefore attempts to change existing law in the guise of a limitation on appropriations. This section addresses legislative matters, and therefore goes beyond the limitations of funds which are the subject of this appropriation.

I, therefore, make a point of order that the language is in violation of rule XXI, clause 2.

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman concedes the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Are there further points of order?

If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read chapter IV and proceeded to read chapter V.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter V be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against chapter V?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order against a provision of chapter V.

The portion of the bill to which the point of order relates is as follows:

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 1. Subject to valid existing rights, administration of the following described lands is hereby transferred to the Veterans Administration for use as an addition to the Veterans Administration Medical Center, San Francisco, to be used for the purpose of parking vehicles, notwithstanding any other provision of laws: That tract of unimproved Department of the Interior land lying easterly of the Veterans Administration Medical Center, San Francisco, and known as East Ft. Miley, provided that the actual description of the lands to be administered by the Veterans Administration shall be determined by a survey made and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The actual description shall be published in the Federal Register by the Secretary of the Interior as a Public Land Order.

SEC. 2. In the event that the Administrator of the Veterans Administration determines that all or any part of the lands described in section 1 are no longer needed for Medical Center purposes, those lands no longer needed shall be returned to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. These provisions may be cited as the "Veterans Administration Medical Center, San Francisco, Transfer Act of 1984".

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against a provision entitled "Adminstrative Provisions" beginning on line 15, page 22 and ending on line 11, page 23, on the ground that this constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill in violation of rule XXI.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is conceded, and the point of order is sustained.

Are there further points of order?

If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter VI

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter VI be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Are there any points of order against chapter VI?

If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter VII.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter VII be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against chapter VII?

If not, are there any amendments to chapter VII?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BIAGGI

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The portion of the bill to which the amendment relates is as follows:

OFFICE OF HUMAN DEVELOPMENT SERVICES

SOCIAL SERVICES BLOCK GRANT

For an additional amount for "Social services block grant", $25,000,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIAGGI: Page 30, after line 11, insert the following new item:

HUMAN DEVELOPMENT SERVICES

For an additional amount for "Human development services", $15,000,000, of which amount $10,000,000 shall be available for part B of title III of the Older Americans Act of 1965 and $5,000,000 shall be available for subpart 2 of part C of such title.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to H.R. 6040, the second supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1984. My amendment would add $15 million in funds for two programs under the Older Americans Act. The first would be $10 million for title IIIB—supportive services and senior centers—the second would be $5 million for title IIIC2—the national home delivered meals program.

On merit, each of these programs is most deserving of this modest increase in funds. In the case of title IIIB—despite it being the glue which holds the rest of the act together—it has not enjoyed an increase in appropriations since 1980. My amendment would raise the appropriation level to $250 million which is still well below the authorized level of $365.3 million.

Title IIIB provides funds for the following important services. Transportation, adult day care, community based care, in home care such as personal care—shopping, housekeeping and chore services, escort, legal, telephone reassurance, client counseling, case management, assessment and repairs and maintenance programs. Each of these services separately, or in the aggregate, help to achieve the goal of providing a coordinate degree of services aimed at promoting independence and dignity for senior citizens.

The fiscal pressures on title IIIB have grown enormously as a result of the 4-year freeze in their funding level. Consider the most important service it provides—transportation. Transportation costs alone have increased by over 15 percent in the time that IIIB has not had an increase. These transportation services include those which take seniors to and from nutrition programs—or which help to deliver the home delivered meal. Congress has seen fit to provide increases in funds for the nutrition program under the act in recent years but unless we begin to address ourselves to the needs of title IIIB since it is so closely linked to the nutrition program, we will be creating a problem for the future.

Congress did in fact provide a mechanism under an amendment I authored to the 1981 Older Americans Act amendments, to allow for a transfer of up to 20 percent of funds between titles III B and C. However, I viewed that as a short-term solution and one that should not serve as an excuse to deny additional funding for title IIIB.

One final justification for my amendment. As an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging I have been working closely with my colleague from Maine, Ms. SNOWE, on a new and potentially serious problem which impacts directly on title IIIB. The implementation of the so-called prospective reimbursement program or DRG's has begun to result in an increase in the number of elderly patients being discharged earlier from hospitals. These elderly in a number of instances are being referred to area agencies on aging who are now being called upon to provide community based care out of their existing—and frozen title IIIB allotment. Testimony received before both the House Select and Senate Special Committee on Aging documents this point. Ms. SNOWE's interest stems from the particular problems affecting area agencies in the State of Maine. All told there has been a dramatic 38-percent increase in the number of such referrals in States including Maine, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Michigan just in the first 3 months of full implementation of DRG's. These numbers will most certainly grow as the system does.

This latest crisis on the shoulders of title IIIB helped to provide the justification for an amendment I successfully authored to H.R. 4785 while it was in the Education and Labor Committee. This amendment provides for a major increase in the authorizations under title IIIB for the 3 years that H.R. 4785 reauthorizes the Older Americans Act for it was based on legislation authored by Ms. SNOWE, H.R. 5265. I was able to gain passage of this amendment on the strength of trying to remedy the demands placed on IIIB since 1980 and to cope with new demands caused by the DRG phenomenon. My colleague Ms. SNOWE who serves as the ranking minority member of my Subcommittee on Human Services deserves great credit for bringing this important matter to the attention of the House and passage of my amendment today will demonstrate our concern and desire to cope with this issue.

The second part of my amendment would increase appropriations for the national home delivered meals program or title IIIC2 of the act by $5 million. An increase such as I am proposing would raise the appropriations level for this program to $67 million, still below the $8.7 million authorized. More importantly, this could assist in the providing of up to 1 million additional meals for the homebound elderly of this Nation.

Let us review a little of the history of this program. It was established as part of the 1978 amendments to the Older Americans Act. It was established in response to data which indicated that upward of 20 percent of elderly individuals in nursing homes were there simply due to an inability to maintain a proper diet. The costs of nursing home care far exceed that of providing one hot meal a day 5 days a week as this program does.

The Subcommittee on Human Services which I chair has done extensive research including a survey of some 1,200 home delivered meals programs across the Nation and our findings provide, I believe, a more than ample justification for this modest increase in funds: 82 percent of those surveyed cited increased demand for home delivered meals in the past year; 78 percent state that waiting lists have increased to the extent that the average waiting list is now 299.

Our findings buttress those from an earlier analysis done by the Administration on Aging which points to the fact that the average age of seniors serviced by this program is 78—eligibility age is 60. A total of 65 percent of the recipients of home delivered meals have incomes under $6,000. A total of 98 percent are considered to be priority in need of services as compared to 78 percent to those receiving congregate meals.

The justification for this amendment rests not only with the demand of today—but the expected demand of the future. The Census Bureau tells us that the fastest growing segment of the elderly population are those 75 and over—the exact group served by this program. We must be in a position to offer cost-effective and humane alternatives to institutionalization. The national home delivered meals provide such an alternative and this $5 million increase will allow it to better fulfill its mandate.

We consider this amendment as Congress rapidly approaches final action on a reauthorization of all the programs and services under the Older Americans Act. The Senate has already completed action on their bill, S. 2603—while the House bill, H.R. 4785 is expected to be passed next week. Both bills would extend the programs under the act for 3 additional years and if the House bill prevails, with significant increases in authorizations.

Yet as everyone in this House knows, it is appropriations which really count. For the Older Americans Act to work most effectively in all of our congressional districts—we must provide for balanced growth in funding—the act is set up to be coordinated—but it will never achieve that mandate if growth among individual programs are as sporadic as it has been.

Next year, we will observe the 20th anniversary of the Older Americans Act. No one can dispute that it is a major success story. It is time to recognize this the best way we can and provide its key programs with increases in funds. The Biaggi amendment deserves support for that reason.

Let me make one final observation. Passage of my amendment will be of enormous help to the national network made up of State agencies on aging as well as area agencies on aging who have been struggling for the past 4 years with the frozen title IIIB funding. It was ofttimes difficult to make the same case before Congress to provide increases in funds for the services they provided under title IIIB. Yet the network persevered and managed to grow and respond to the difficult challenges which were compounded by a lack of growth in Federal resources. Theirs was often a quiet struggle but one which has not gone totally unnoticed. Today every State in this Nation has a State agency on aging and there are more area agencies on aging than there are congressional districts which means that decisions are in fact being made at the local level. Let the adoption of the Biaggi amendment signal a recognition of the important work performed by all levels of the aging network and a balanced appropriation growth policy of the future will enhance the performance of the act and those who administer it on the State, area and service provider levels.

One final note. The $5 million provided in my amendment for the National Home Delivered Meals Program has been sought for some time not only by myself and others in Congress but by the main advocates for the program, the leadership of the National Association of Meal Programs and the National Association of Nutrition and Aging Service Programs. Earlier this year, the president of NAMP, Mamie Lee of Pittsburgh passed away suddenly. I worked closely with her and feel that our approval of this amendment would serve as a tribute to this fine woman and those like her who work day after day to make life better for our elderly.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIAGGI. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. NATCHER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman's amendment, $10 million is for support services, and $5 million is additional money for "Meals on Wheels" for the elderly.

As the gentleman has pointed out, this would be the first increase that we have had in this particular category for several years.

Unless there is some objection on the other side from my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], we have no objection on this side to this amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIAGGI. I would be delighted to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have no objection on this side. This is an area of funding that I have worked very hard for in the past.

I would urge the gentleman in the well, though, to work with the authorization committee and get them going. We had to defer all of these appropriations in the 1985 bill because there is no authorization.

Mr. BIAGGI. I am familiar with that, and I thank the gentleman for his suggestion and also for his support, and also the support of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in favor of the amendment which is being offered by my friend and colleague, MARIO BIAGGI—a very dedicated and responsible member of the Select Committee on Aging and chairman of the Human Services Subcommittee. This amendment would increase the funding levels for titles III B and C2 of the Older Americans Act by $10 million and $5 million, respectively.

As chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, I cannot stress enough just how important this legislation is to millions of older Americans. Since its inception in 1965, this legislation has been, and continues to be, the primary vehicle for social service delivery to all older Americans.

According to statistics from my own State of California alone, during the 1982-83 fiscal year, approximately 9,083 elderly Californians were put on waiting lists for home delivered meals. I commend my distinguished colleague for this effort and I could not endorse this amendment more strongly.

The Older Americans Act is the life blood to millions of older Americans throughout this Nation. I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in support of this important amendment.●

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to chapter VII? If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter VIII.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter VIII be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order that lie in chapter VIII? Are there any amendments to chapter VIII?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter IX.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that lines 12 through 19 on page 36 constitute legislation on an appropriation bill and, therefore, violate clause 2 of rule XXI.

The portion of the bill to which the point of order relates is as follows:

None of the funds appropriated by this or any other Act for military construction projects exceeding $5,000,000 in the United States territories and possessions in the Pacific and on Kwajalein Island may be used for the performance of any work by foreign contractors: Provided, That the lowest responsive bid of a United States contractor does not exceed the government estimate for the project by greater than twenty per centum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the section prohibits funds from being used for military construction projects exceeding $5 million in U.S. territories and possessions in the Pacific if performed by foreign contractors, unless the lowest U.S. bid exceeds the estimate for the project by 20 percent or more. The language changes the existing "Buy America" restrictions in current law and requires additional duties and functions to be performed by administering officials.

Mr. Chairman, this section addresses legislative matters and, therefore, goes beyond the limitation of funds which are the subject of this appropriation. I make a point of order that lines 12 through 19 on page 36 are in violation of rule XXI, clause 2.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is conceded. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded reading chapter IX and proceeded to read chapter X.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter X be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against chapter X? Are there any amendments to chapter X?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter XI.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter XI be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against chapter XI? Are there any amendments to chapter XI?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COLEMAN OF TEXAS

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment, which has been discussed with me.

The portion of the bill to which the amendment relates is as follows:

CHAPTER XI

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

BUREAU OF GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL OPERATIONS

POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM LIQUIDATION

For necessary funds to be held in trust for payment of claims by or on behalf of depositors to the Postal Savings System, as authorized by section 2 of Public Law 82-117, approved August 13, 1971, $1,000,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLEMAN of Texas: Page 39, after line 21, insert the following:

UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE

SALARIES AND EXPENDITURES

For additional amount for "salaries and expenses", $450,000, which shall be for 154 additional positions for primary inspection for all ports of entry.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would provide the funds for up to 2 months, through fiscal year 1984, to provide for an additional 154 Customs inspectors at all ports of entry. This amendment comes after a long period of research conducted by my office on the understaffing of Customs personnel at border ports of entry.

In June, I met with Customs Commissioner William Von Raab to discuss the problem of understaffing at the border ports of entry. Mr. Von Raab admitted to me that every land port of entry was below current service level in staff. I asked the Commissioner what the Congress could do to help, and he suggested additional funding through the supplemental appropriations bill. That is what my amendment would do.

I requested that the Customs Service provide me with the number of Customs inspection personnel necessary to bring the level back up to fiscal year 1981 current services. The Customs Budget Office provided me with a list of 154. I also asked for the amount of additional funding it would take to acquire the 154 personnel. For 2 months, which is what my amendment would provide for, the cost would be an additional $450,000. That is a small price to pay for the benefits the citizens of this Nation would reap. Furthermore, for those of you concerned about budget ceilings, the Budget Committee has informed me that this amount of funding is far below the ceiling for discretionary spending.

The Customs inspector provides many services to the American public. The inspector is our first line of defense against the unlawful transfer of narcotics into our country. The Customs inspector provides the transfer through which international commerce is conducted. In places like El Paso and San Diego, tourists and people doing business cross between the United States and Mexico as often as people in Washington, DC cross into Maryland and Virginia.

Because of cutbacks in funding for personnel in the last 3 years, inspection personnel have been reduced. The result has been a combination of less defense against narcotics traffic, delays in commerce and tourism, and the deterioration of Customs personnel morale and safety. Already this year we have had one tragedy and several near-tragedies involving Customs inspectors. Last January, an inspector on the bridge in Del Rio, TX was murdered after being kidnapped from his post. Had there been more than two inspectors on the bridge, this tragedy might have been avoided. Every day, cars are stopped at border crossings with Mexico for unreasonably long periods of time. This only helps to impede trade, and for the United States-Mexico border, sustain the border recession caused by the peso devaluation. Ports such as Miami, FL are overwhelmed with influx of drugs. Are these cutbacks efficient Government? Cutting funding does not automatically increase efficiency and productivity as some would have you believe, and the situation in the Customs Service is an example of such unsound reasoning. This amendment is a start to put the Customs Service back together and rebuild our defenses against drug traffic, our trade mechanism, and our borders to the world.

POINT OF ORDER

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] insist on his point of order?

Mr. WHITTEN. I insist on my point of order, Mr. Chairman, and may I make a comment at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the presentation that has been made by my colleague from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN]. However, appropriations for the Customs Service are unauthorized. Being unauthorized, the amendment is subject to a point of order under the Rules of the House on which I can given specific citations. But I do think the present situation is a good example of where the legislative committee should try to get an authorization enacted because I do not think there is any significant difference of opinion among our colleagues about the need for these additional funds and people.

I take this occasion to urge our colleagues on the legislative committees to please authorize many of these programs where year after year we are forced to consider providing funds without authorizations, even when everybody agrees it needs to be done. So I am taking this occasion to urge our colleagues on the legislative committees to deal with these subjects so that we will not have this situation facing us time and time again. One action which the legislative committees could take to relieve this situation is the expanded use of 2-year and multiyear authorization bills.

I want to add that our committee has cooperated with the Rules Committee for many years, and we generally have not asked that matters be waived where it is legislation. Our committee meets and reviews the whole Government operations as presented in the bills of the 13 subcommittees. The committee sometimes reports bills with provisions that could be knocked out on the floor. As long as we do not have a rule waiving matters not under our jurisdiction, and we are not going to ask for such a rule, then we have very little difficulty.

So I am merely making a plea for increased cooperation which I feel we will have in the future. So when our committee does include provisions in bills which technically might be subject to points of order, it is up to the Member who offers it and the legislative committee to work it out. Otherwise they may be struck on a point of order.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I regretfully have to insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] wish to respond to the point of order? The Chair will state that the Chair understands that H.R. 2602, authorizing appropriations for the Customs Service for fiscal year 1984, has not been enacted into law, and that therefore there might be a strong presumption that it is a sustainable point of order.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

I would only comment to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that indeed his admonition to those Members on authorizing committees was, I think, well taken, but certainly it is the other body that has not passed the authorization bill that we are in dire need of. I hardly think the House can be blamed at this point. Indeed it is in my view the other body that has withheld the authorization bill.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the committee for his comments, and I do concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is conceded and sustained.

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time for the purpose of entering into a colloquy with the chairman of the committee.

In regard to title I of the bill, which I understand we passed over, my question is quite simply whether the definition of "vegetable" and "fruit" orders, as contained in section 1, also covers specialty crops such as hops.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I am advised that the dictionary definition states that hops are a member of the mulberry family and the dictionary defines mulberries as a fruit.

It is my understanding that hops would be covered because the dictionary says they are a fruit.

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee chairman, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read chapter XII.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that chapter XII be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order?

Are there any amendments?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KEMP

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The portion of the bill to which the amendment relates is as follows:

Mr. KEMP (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] will be recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Maryland if he would reserve the point of order.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's amendment includes numerous items that are in violation of clauses 2 and 6 of rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard now on his point of order?

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I would ask, would the gentleman reserve his point of order so that I could at least explain the amendment and then have him make his point of order?

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to reserve my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LONG] reserves a point of order on the amendment, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I will not use all the time. I want to thank the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LONG], for his patience in allowing me to at least explain what I raised a little earlier when I discussed one of the flaws that I think is in this appropriation bill. My amendment would address the significant cut in the President's program for Central America which, as I pointed out in my earlier remarks, Mr. Chairman, really is not just the President's initiative but the total effort that has been made by the bipartisan Commission for Central America, the Kissinger Commission.

My amendment would add a total of $359 million, Mr. Chairman, to bring the bilateral programs in Central America up to the request in accord with not just the President's request, but with the Commission's recommendations. The Kemp substitute would provide half again as much economic aid as military assistance, $73 million in development aid, $290 million in economic assistance, $1 million in expanding Peace Corps operations, and $197 million in security assistance. It would carry out, as I pointed out earlier, the wishes of the House of Representatives which voted in May on the Broomfield-Murtha amendment to the foreign aid authorization bill which I alluded to and which passed on May 10.

I just want to make one point to my colleagues, and then I will sit down and obviously allow the point of order to be discussed. My point is simply this: The new President of El Salvador, Napoleon Duarte, has achieved a remarkable degree of support in this country for helping El Salvador cope with its serious economic and security problems. It has been now almost 2½ months before this body has taken any action on the outstanding supplemental request for his country. He has made reforms. He has fulfilled every single obligation that was required of him. I do not think there is any other country in the world that is subject to such conditions, many of which I supported, and, as I said earlier, I give the chairman of the committee a great deal of credit for his efforts pushing those reforms.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, extremely important that in the 1984 fiscal year and in this 1984 supplemental appropriation that we begin the process of enabling the new Government of El Salvador to meet the formidable challenges it faces, and acknowledge the reforms that have been made, not only in El Salvador, but throughout Central America.

I would ask my colleagues to give our well-deserved support to this new leader, to his new administration, and to the program that has been established on a bipartisan basis for Central America. We have done this for other friends and allies; now it is critical that we move ahead with this very important and urgently needed security, economic, and development assistance.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEMP. I would be glad to yield to my chairman and then to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the points the gentleman has made are very well taken. That is why I supported the $62 million in the urgent supplemental. Of course, another $20 million became available as a result of the Long-Specter amendment which stipulated that one-third of the continuing resolution money be withheld until there was a trial and verdict in the case of the killers of the nuns. That trial has occurred and a guilty verdict was reached.

That means that right now there is at least $50 million available to be spent in what is only a little over 2 months between now and the end of the fiscal year. More than that amount would be simply thrusting money down their throats. Of course, we are giving additional money, almost full funding, in the fiscal 1985 bill.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I will just take my time back long enough to remind my colleagues that the urgent needs of the Government of El Salvador prompted President Duarte to seek more assistance elsewhere. He recently went to Europe to ask the Western European governments to provide some assistance to El Salvador. Certainly all of us would like to see our European allies contributing more to the defense of this vital region of the world; but again, Mr. Duarte has been in West Germany recently requesting their help on a very urgent basis. So it simply is not the case that they don't need more help.

Napoleon Duarte has been President now for 2 months. Not a single new dollar has been forthcoming from the United States, not a vote in support of El Salvador. It seems to me that the amendment I propose is an essential step, not just for El Salvador, but in helping to implement the bipartisan recommendations in the Kissinger Commission.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Duarte has been well rewarded for his visits.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I press my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the gentleman's amendment includes numerous items which are in violation of clause 2 and clause 6 of rule XXI. I would be happy to read all those, if the gentleman insists, but I do not think that is needed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] wish to speak on the point of order?

Mr. KEMP. No, Mr. Chairman; I will await the ruling of the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Failing any citation to laws authorizing the appropriations contained in the amendment, the Chair sustains the point of order.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. STRATTON

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STRATTON moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I was following on the closed circuit television the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LONG] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] about how many millions of dollars over and above what had been provided last year were included in the current legislation and how there was so much money available to El Salvador that it was running out of their ears.

I had the privilege a couple weeks ago, under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. NICHOLS] to make my first trip to El Salvador and to Nicaragua and to see exactly what the situation was down there.

I must say that I was a little bit amazed at the actual situation that existed there in El Salvador in contrast to what many of the people who have been journeying down to that fair land have been reporting back here.

We had in particular the opportunity to meet with President Duarte in the presidential palace, a very lovely palace, and the President was extremely generous with his time. He indicated that he appreciated the support and encouragement he had gotten from the United States, but he said:

Actually, in spite of this love affair that has gone on between our two countries, when the actual honeymoon came on, it lasted only 12 hours.

He said, "Before the election I was led to believe that we were going to get hundreds of millions of dollars if we won the election," but he said, "At the present time we haven't gotten a single cent," just as the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] has already indicated.

It was only 2 days after that visit that President Duarte left to go to European countries, West Germany, and others, to try to pick up money for the support of the regime that he was heading and which had received these elaborate promises from the United States of America, but so far without any concrete results.

We tried to point out that probably there was some foul up in the appropriation procedures, because if he had been led to believe it was going to be available, we oftentimes do slip up. But I think it is important for this House to realize that the President of the Salvador Republic, who is doing an outstanding job—he has changed people in the military; he has eliminated those in the military that he thinks were responsible for the death squads; and he has talked directly to the junior officers and told them what he is seeking to do.

I think it is criminal that we not now be providing him with the funds he needs to run that country. He can sit in a beautiful presidential palace, but if he does not have the support of the United States, if he does not have the support of this Congress, if he does not have the support that I thought had been provided to him when the gentleman from Texas, our majority leader [Mr. WRIGHT] made his eloquent speech and turned this House around on aid to El Salvador, then we are failing, I think, in providing what is actually humantiarian aid to a country that is improving, that is doing a better job, and I think this aid is on a par with the kind of funds that we gave to Asian countries, to European countries and African countries after World War II. But somehow there seems to be an impression that something is wrong to give anything to a country in Central America.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I will be very happy to yield.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I think at the time the gentleman visited down there, it is quite possible that the Senate had not acted on the urgent supplemental conference bill. If that is true, since that time, the Senate has acted and El Salvador has been sent an additional $62 million in military assistance.

There is no sense in providing this big increase with only 2 months remaining in the fiscal year.

Further, the subcommittee started marking-up the 1985 foreign aid bill this morning and it contains additional funds for El Salvador. A point of order has been raised on the proposed amendment already so we are really talking about a dead horse.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I just want to support what the gentleman from New York has said and what the other gentleman from New York is trying to do. I am not a great advocate of foreign aid, as this body knows, but I was persuaded that their cause is just and I hope that what we are sending them down there is needed.

Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. KEMP, and urge my colleagues to do the same. This assistance, both military and economic, is desperately needed by El Salvador. We have nurtured this country, and just when it is beginning to develop the infrastructure necessary to support a democratic government responsive to the needs of its people, we are refusing to help them.

During a recent visit by Armed Services Committee members, both Salvadoran and U.S. officials agreed that significant progress toward creating a democracy in El Salvador is being realized. Earlier this year El Salvador held its first free presidential election in many years. Over 80 percent of the eligible population voted. Human rights violations appear to be on the decline, and the major opposition candidate, Roberto D'Aubuisson, told the delegation that he will support the new government within the framework of the Constitution.

President Duarte stressed, however, that "the honeymoon of his election was over after the first 12 hours." He noted that the elections created great expectations on the part of the Salvadoran people, as well as the United States and various European governments. If democracy is to flourish, the country's economic and social conditions must improve; the agrarian reform must continue; and most importantly, the United States must continue its assistance to the people of El Salvador. He complained that the United States has not responded as expected and instead has essentially been "yes, in sentiment—no, in resources."

The Government and people of El Salvador were led to believe that if free elections were held and the Government took positive steps toward controlling human rights violations, that U.S. assistance would be forthcoming.

There was general agreement among the Embassy, church, and Salvadoran officials who met with the delegation that the human rights situation is improving. Significant progress has been made in preventing indiscriminate violence since President Duarte assumed office. He has taken several positive steps to ensure that human rights are not violated, including the removal of officials suspected of death-squad affiliations from Government positions. He has committed himself to the establishment of a commission to investigate human rights violations, and has addressed military units throughout the country on the need to stop such violations. Finally, to dramatize the firm stance of his administration against human rights violations, Duarte intends to supervise personally the investigation of the next documented case of abuse.

The Salvadoran military is also making progress and is struggling to train and equip its forces so that peace can be maintained. Without that peace and the elimination of guerrilla attacks, needed land reform and critical industrial and agrarian development cannot be accomplished.

El Salvador, of course, faces many problems in its quest to become a stable democracy. Reform will not be easy and will not come about as quickly as most would like. However, one thing is clear; without meaningful U.S. assistance, furnished in a timely manner, the Government of El Salvador will not be able to fulfill its commitment to its people.

Although El Salvador is fiercely independent and cherishes its sovereignty, it recognizes that it desperately needs the temporary assistance of other countries.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment offered by Mr. KEMP as a commitment to El Salvador's efforts to help itself, and to so ensure that U.S. troops will not be needed to assist that country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON].

The preferential motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read title II.

Mr. WHITTEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title II be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order?

Are there any amendments?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read title III.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONTE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONTE: Page 68, after line 21, insert the following new section:

SEC. 303. None of the funds made available to the United States Postal Service under this Act or any other Act may be used to restructure employee compensation practices as in effect under the most recently effective collective bargaining agreement under section 1206 of title 39, United States Code, except in accordance with the results of procedures set forth in section 1207 of such title.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL], chairman of the subcommittee, is not on the floor, so I reserve a point of order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

□ 1550

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I have spoken with the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL] and counsel in regards to this amendment.

The Chairman, this amendment is designed to send a clear and strong message to the negotiators—on both sides—of the current Postal Service employee contract talks. That message is fairness and negotiations in good faith.

I'm sure that Members are familar with the current stalemate in employee contract negotiations. The latest union contract expired on July 20, 1984; 600,000 unionized employees are now working without a collective-bargaining agreement. At the end of the negotiation process, both sides were still miles apart from reaching common ground. However, the specific issues involved in the negotiations are not the reason for this amendment. In 1970, the Congress attempted to depoliticize, as much as possible, the working of the Postal Service. The problem now is not with the particular issues or demands under negotiation, but with an abuse of the process as provided in the law.

The Postal Service Reorganization Act of 1970 grants the postal workers the right to bargain collectively. Designed to protect the public interest, the law provides for an orderly and fair process to negotiate union contract agreements. If an existing contract expires and the parties involved are at an impasse, then a 45-day fact-finding period begins. If the issues are still not resolved at this point, the negotiations are referred to a three-member arbitration board to conclude a binding agreement.

In return for this right to bargain collectively, we expect our postal employees to refrain from strikes or any job actions. The experience in 1970 should remind Members of the reason for this prohibition.

Recent news reports about unilateral moves by the U.S. Postal Service are disturbing to many Members of Congress, including myself. Last week, the Postal Service announced that new employees hired after August 4, 1984 would be paid about 23 percent less than current workers.

With the negotiations heading for the binding arbitration stage, the Postal Service has decided to impose one of its demands, subverting the process provided in the Reorganization Act. This is unfair and a breach of the agreement reached by Congress in the 1970 Reorganization Act.

This amendment is designed to prohibit the Postal Service from imposing this unfair, unilateral action before an agreement is reached. The amendment deals only with the process of negotiations, not the issues under consideration. It says that there can be no restructuring of the employee's compensation practices until there is a negotiated agreement as provided by the law. If there are changes to be made in employee compensation, let those changes develop as a result of the negotiation process designed by Congress and in effect for 14 years.

Let me emphasize to the House, the amendment is not an attempt to take sides in the dispute, but an effort to make sure that the procedures mandated by the Congress are followed during this negotiation.

The Congress has an obligation to insure that the spirit and intent of the law is fulfilled. Postal workers are Federal employees and should have all the rights and protections reserved for them by the law, nothing more or nothing less.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that a point of order has been reserved.

I would like to ask some questions with regard to the subject matter to the author of the amendment.

It is my understanding that this amendment is one in which title 39 of the United States Code is affected, particularly with regard to the procedures set forth in section 207 of that title. Please explain to us what is contained in that section.

Mr. CONTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROYBAL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Chapter 39, to which you referred, is the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970.

Mr. ROYBAL. In this Postal Reorganization Act, is what you are attempting to do in this instance is to modify that act or to put in place certain procedures that come under that act?

Mr. CONTE. Does the gentleman mean my amendment?

Mr. ROYBAL. By your amendment.

Mr. CONTE. No; it does not try to modify that act. It is just a straight funding prohibition which refers to chapter 39, the Postal Service Reorganization Act.

Mr. ROYBAL. Has any attempt been made to try to get this amendment also passed in the other body?

Mr. CONTE. Not at this point. But certainly, if this amendment is adopted today, there will be a lot of work done to get it adopted. I expect to talk to Mr. ABDNOR and other Members in the other body. I think many Members of Congress are very upset about this unilateral action by the Postal Service.

Mr. ROYBAL. May I say that I wholeheartedly agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts in the statements that he has made with regard to this matter. I think that it is a correct procedure to take in the absence of insisting on the point of order. We are not going to insist on that point of order. But I wanted to be sure that we had something in place in the other body that would complement what is being done here today so that when we go to conference we will have at least been able to present our subject matter on an equal basis.

Mr. CONTE. First of all, let me say, as I have said many, many times here on the floor, that I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL]. He has done a great job as chairman of that subcommittee. It is a pleasure for me to work with him.

Let me say that if this amendment is adopted today the gentleman can be assured that starting tonight I will work with Members of the other body on this amendment, and I think we have a lot of support.

Mr. ROYBAL. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order until I could confer with the chairman of the subcommittee. It is his desire not to insist on it, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not insist on his point of order.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I would bring to the attention of the committee that Chairman FORD, chairman of the authorizing committee of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, on July 26, 1984, wrote to Postmaster Bolger with reference to the procedures to which this amendment speaks. In that letter the chairman of the authorizing committee essentially took the same position that the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] takes in offering his amendment, which is to say to hold the parties in equal position until such time as the statutory arbitration procedure has an opportunity to work, so that none of the individuals involved will be prejudiced during the period of time during which the arbitrators consider this matter.

If that were not the case, as the gentleman from Massachusetts points out, unlike the private sector where in the private sector the employer would have the option of imposing his last offer, the employee would then have the alternative opportunity to go out on strike, in this instance, of course, the employees are precluded from taking that action as a strike is illegal. Therefore I think the actions of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the substance of this amendment are entirely appropriate and effect fairness for both sides without, as the gentleman has said, interjecting ourselves in and taking a position as to either issue.

□ 1600

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote from the letter Mr. FORD sent to Postmaster General Bolger dated July 26, 1984, wherein he said, and I quote:

> Why the United States Postal Service could not have continued to advocate its contract offer peacefully, through the statutory dispute resolution process, is beyond my comprehension. Whatever is achieved by this action is being purchased at the cost of a generation of ill will and devastated morale.

I think if we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts we will preclude that unwanted effect and therefore I rise in strong support of the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further discussion on the amendment.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. CONTE, and indicate my support for his amendment. He raises some excellent points with respect to the obligations we have to postal employees, and his amendment clarifies those obligations.

In a recent letter I sent to John McKean, the Chairman of the Board of Governors for the U.S. Postal Service, I urged him to keep in mind the important role that the mail sorters and handlers have played in achieving management's objectives. Their efforts have indeed been significant in bringing the Postal Service to a sound financial footing, a point that must be recognized in the negotiating process.

In addition, I encouraged good faith efforts to provide incentives for continued advances in productivity. A profitable Postal Service not only reflects well on the performance of postal employees but also underscores its ability to compete effectively with other mail deliveries.

We must assure that in the negotiating process the proper procedures are followed. A credible and competitive postal service is a vital asset to this Nation, and the concerns of postal workers and letter carriers must be addressed.

I commend my colleague from Massachusetts for introducing this amendment, and once again, voice my support for the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WALKER

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALKER: On Page 69, after line 2, insert the following section:

SEC. 303: Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, each amount appropriated or otherwise made available in this Act is hereby reduced by one percent.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the Democratic candidate for President of the United States, Mr. Mondale, was quoted with regard to deficit and the Washington Times newspaper of this morning reports it this way:

Mr. Mondale attacked the administration's federal deficit as the cause of high interest rates, collapse of small businesses, unmanageable mortgage levels and out-of-reach educational costs.

"I have heard that the deficit is too difficult an issue for Americans to understand," he said. "I am told that the deficit is too cold a concept to move people. I don't believe it."

Now, if the version of this supplemental that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee rolled for us out here a little while ago is in fact a correct version of what we are considering here, I would suggest we right now have an opportunity to do something about that which Mr. Mondale spoke of yesterday.

Mr. Mondale was attacking the administration's high deficit, Federal deficit. Well, according to the chairman of the committee, what we have before us here today is a supplemental appropriation which was asked for by the administration, that we juggle the figures a bit to meet our own priorities but we are in fact acting on the administration's request.

What I am suggesting is if we really are concerned about the same things Mr. Mondale is concerned about, here is a chance to do something about those concerns, at least reduce this supplemental appropriation by 1 percent.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Does the gentleman intend his amendment to be applicable to the pay increases that are provided in this bill for the Government employees?

Mr. WALKER. I would say to the gentleman that it is my intention to cover all aspects of the bill with a 1-percent cut in the total funding of the bill.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. YATES. Are not the funds that are in this bill for the pay increases based upon request of the administration?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The point that I am making is the fact that it is your Presidential candidate who is telling us the administration has this high deficit problee which is causing untold problems across the country.

So if the gentleman is correct, these are administration requests, here is an opportunity offered by this gentleman on the Republican side to reduce the administration's request by a modest 1 percent.

And I would suggest to the gentleman that the administration claims that within this particular appropriations bill there are some things in there that they did not request. I would say to the gentleman that they claim that there are a little over $1 billion of unrequested domestic add-ons.

All my amendment would do would be to get about half of that back. It would get $540 million of that back. It would also, it seems to me, speak to something that we have heard an awful lot on this floor. We have heard an awful lot of people who say that we cannot cut individual appropriation bills because there are good and proper reasons for those bills to be brought before us at the levels they are.

This is a general appropriations bill, this goes to all aspects of Government. Those of you who have told your constituency that you want to see something done in the defense area, here is your chance. My amendment would cut $187 million, a fairly modest decrease, but neverless a decrease; $187 million out of defense.

Are you going to go back and explain to those people that you have been telling that you are going to get at the deficit by cutting defense that you voted against doing something about defense? Or how about the $240,000 in military foreign aid?

I say that if you vote against it, you are voting against those cuts. How about the $1.8 million in economic foreign aid? Save that amount of money. I suggest there is a few other things you might want to consider, too.

Why, this is a very dangerous amendment; this saves $25,000 of the money that is in here for restoring the Presidential yacht. Good heavens, you do not want to go back and tell your constituents that you actually saved $25,000.

How about $5,000 restoration of a golf course down here at East Potomac Park? My amendment actually cuts $5,000 out of the restoration of a golf course. Or how about the $6,000 of the upgrading of our own video recording system around here?

You know, it must be taxing on the video recording system to have those wide angle shots of the Chamber; we are having to upgrade it to the tune of $600,000. Well, I save $6,000 of that.

Or how about the $5,000 for additional parking places out in San Francisco? It seems to me here is something we might want to consider doing.

In other words, you know, we are really not doing anything very drastic in this amendment. It is a 1-percent cut. It is a way of speaking to the deficit.

I would ask for its approval.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this type of amendment is troublesome to all Members. In my experience in Congress, I have seen two or three major programs or bills where the budget of the President and the Office of Management and Budget regularly sent down recommendations at a higher than necessary figure so that Members of Congress could show how much they cut the budget. Foreign aid has been handled many times that way.

Your Committee on Appropriations, 57 members, 13 subcommittees, spent hours working on this bill. They bring you their best judgment as to projects and amounts.

After all that work, we bring you a bill which is under the President's request by $930 million. It is under the House 302 allocation by $768 million and under the revised fiscal 1984 budget ceilings contained in the House-passed budget ceiling for fiscal year 1985. It is under that ceiling by $209 million.

Here is our situation: I was one of those that promoted the Budget Act, because we had so many entitlements in law. Fifty-eight percent of annual expenditures did not come to the Congress for annual appropriation. I hate to say it, but the Budget Committee by and large has given time and attention to the control of controllables, the remaining 42 percent where we did not have a problem to start with.

Be that as it may, if you start the practice of percentage cuts, judging by past experience, you lead to adding increases in the bills, so you can take it out. In the long run you will lose, because you will not reflect what the Committee on Appropriations believes, after thousands of hours of hearings.

Let me tell you what this amendment would do. It would cut out the appropriations for programs which many of you believe in and which your constituents believe.

Many of you usually send out news releases on veterans compensation. It would cut that program. It would cut the veterans' readjustment benefits, civil service retirement, it would reduce food stamps, Public Law 480, and many others.

In those cuts the beneficiaries could go to court, as I understand it, where you have entitlements and get judgments. We might then go through all that paying of judgments and other expense. I realize that the gentleman from prior actions wants to cut whatever we do by a certain percentage. If the bill had been 10 percent lower, or 20 percent he or someone else would have offered this same amendment. The author will get a certain amount of attention in the press.

Again I tell you, you jeopardize the system that we have of bringing you our honest judgment. If you start the practice of taking out 5 percent, everybody will soon learn, "put 5 percent in there so that so-and-so could take it out" or better they will probably add 10 percent just to be safe.

□ 1610

That is a bad system. It will damage those very programs that so many Members are proud of having sponsored.

So this practice of a percentage cut whatever the amount, can only weaken our system. I urge the defeat of this amendment. Let us get back to where we rely on the results of the work of 57 Members over the months.

I hope you will help us stop this 1-, 2-, 3-percent cuts across the board, because if we do not, we could well have to pass another supplemental appropriations bill to take care of essential programs; programs in which you believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALKER) there were—ayes 2, noes 21.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Messrs. McNULTY, MAVROULES, and MOODY, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, and Messrs. GILMAN and KAZEN changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. HILLIS and MINISH changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I move the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MINISH] having assumed the chair, Mr. BROOKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6040) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Messrs. WIRTH, CONYERS, SAVAGE, DELLUMS, TOWNS, CROCKETT, and HAYES changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

(Mr. LOWERY of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, I missed the vote on rollcall 336. I regrettably was out of the House Chamber in a meeting with the State Department regarding an urgent issue on the seizure of a tuna boat in the Western Pacific.

Had I been here, I would have voted "aye" on that amendment.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4325, CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 4325) to amend part D of title IV of the Social Security Act to assure, through mandatory income withholding, incentive payments to States, and other improvements in the child support enforcement program, that all children in the United States who are in need of assistance in securing financial support from their parents will receive such assistance regardless of their circumstances, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 98-925)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4325) to amend part D of title IV of the Social Security Act to assure, through mandatory income withholding, incentive payments to States, and other improvements in the child support enforcement program, that all children in the United States who are in need of assistance in securing financial support from their parents will receive such assistance regardless of their circumstances, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

PURPOSE OF THE PROGRAM

SEC. 2. Section 451 of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "and obtaining child and spousal support," and inserting in lieu thereof "obtaining child and spousal support, and assuring that assistance in obtaining support will be available under this part to all children (whether or not eligible for aid under part A) for whom such assistance is requested,".

IMPROVED CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT THROUGH REQUIRED STATE LAWS AND PROCEDURES

SEC. 3. (a) Section 454 of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (18);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (19) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding after paragraph (19) the following new paragraph:

"(20) provide, to the extent required by section 466, that the State (A) shall have in effect all of the laws to improve child support enforcement effectiveness which are referred to in that section, and (B) shall implement the procedures which are prescribed in or pursuant to such laws.".

(b) Part D of title IV of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"REQUIREMENT OF STATUTORILY PRESCRIBED PROCEDURES TO IMPROVE EFFECTIVENESS OF CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 466. (a) In order to satisfy section 454(20)(A), each State must have in effect laws requiring the use of the following procedures, consistent with this section and with regulations of the Secretary, to increase the effectiveness of the program which the State administers under this part:

"(1) Procedures described in subsection (b) for the withholding from income of amounts payable as support.

"(2) Procedures under which expedited processes (determined in accordance with regulations of the Secretary) are in effect under the State judicial system or under State administrative processes (A) for obtaining and enforcing support orders, and (B) at the option of the State, for establishing paternity. The Secretary may waive the provisions of this paragraph with respect to one or more political subdivisions within the State on the basis of the effectiveness and timeliness of support order issuance and enforcement within the political subdivision (in accordance with the general rule for exemptions under subsection (d)).

"(3) Procedures under which the State child support enforcement agency shall request, and the State shall provide, that for the purpose of enforcing a support order under any State plan approved under this part—

"(A) any refund of State income tax which would otherwise be payable to an absent parent will be reduced, after notice has been sent to that absent parent of the proposed reduction and the procedures to be followed to contest it (and after full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State), by the amount of any overdue support owed by such absent parent;

"(B) the amount by which such refund is reduced shall be distributed in accordance with section 457(b)(4) or (d)(3) in the case of overdue support assigned to a State pursuant to section 402(a)(26) or 471(a)(17), or, in the case of overdue support which a State has agreed to collect under section 454(6), shall be distributed, after deduction of any fees imposed by the State to cover the costs of collection, to the child or parent to whom such support is owed; and

"(C) notice of the absent parent's social security account number (or numbers, if he has more than one such number) and home address shall be furnished to the State agency requesting the refund offset, and to the State agency enforcing the order.

"(4) Procedures under which liens are imposed against real and personal property for amounts of overdue support owed by an absent parent who resides or owns property in the State.

"(5) Procedures which permit the establishment of the paternity of any child at any time prior to such child's eighteenth birthday.

"(6) Procedures which require that an absent parent give security, post a bond, or give some other guarantee to secure payment of overdue support, after notice has been sent to such absent parent of the proposed action and of the procedures to be followed to contest it (and after full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State).

"(7) Procedures by which information regarding the amount of overdue support owed by an absent parent residing in the State will be made available to any consumer reporting agency (as defined in section 603(f) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. 1681a(f))) upon the request of such agency; except that (A) if the amount of the overdue support involved in any case is less than $1,000, information regarding such amount shall be made available only at the option of the State, (B) any information with respect to an absent parent shall be made available under such procedures only after notice has been sent to such absent parent of the proposed action, and such absent parent has been given a reasonable opportunity to contest the accuracy of such information (and after full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State), and (C) a fee for furnishing such information, in an amount not exceeding the actual cost thereof, may be imposed on the requesting agency by the State.

"(8) Procedures under which all child support orders which are issued or modified in the State will include provision for withholding from wages, in order to assure that withholding as a means of collecting child support is available if arrearages occur without the necessity of filing application for services under this part.

Notwithstanding section 454(20)(B), the procedures which are required under paragraphs (3), (4), (6), and (7) need not be used or applied in cases where the State determines (using guidelines which are generally available within the State and which take into account the payment record of the absent parent, the availability of other remedies, and other relevant considerations) that such use or application would not carry out the purposes of this part or would be otherwise inappropriate in the circumstances.

"(b) The procedures referred to in subsection (a)(1) (relating to the withholding from income of amounts payable as support) must provide for the following:

"(1) In the case of each absent parent against whom a support order is or has been issued or modified in the State, and is being enforced under the State plan, so much of such parent's wages (as defined by the State for purposes of this section) must be withheld, in accordance with the succeeding provisions of this subsection, as is necessary to comply with the order and provide for the payment of any fee to the employer which may be required under paragraph (6)(A), up to the maximum amount permitted under section 303(b) of the Consumer Credit Protection Act (15 U.S.C. 1673(b)). If there are arrearages to be collected, amounts withheld to satisfy such arrearages, when added to the amounts withheld to pay current support and provide for the fee, may not exceed the limit permitted under such section 303(b), but the State need not withhold up to the maximum amount permitted under such section in order to satisfy arrearages.

"(2) Such withholding must be provided without the necessity of any application therefor in the case of a child (whether or not eligible for aid under part A) with respect to whom services are already being provided under the State plan under this part, and must be provided in accordance with this subsection on the basis of an application for services under the State plan in the case of any other child in whose behalf a support order has been issued or modified in the State. In either case such withholding must occur without the need for any amendment to the support order involved or for any further action (other than those actions required under this part) by the court or other entity which issued such order.

"(3) An absent parent shall become subject to such withholding, and the advance notice required under paragraph (4) shall be given, on the earliest of—

"(A) the date on which the payments which the absent parent has failed to make under such order are at least equal to the support payable for one month,

"(B) the date as of which the absent parent requests that such withholding begin, or

"(C) such earlier date as the State may select.

"(4)(A) Such withholding must be carried out in full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State, and (subject to subparagraph (B)) the State must send advance notice to each absent parent to whom paragraph (1) applies regarding the proposed withholding and the procedures such absent parent should follow if he or she desires to contest such withholding on the grounds that withholding (including the amount to be withheld) is not proper in the case involved because of mistakes of fact. If the absent parent contests such withholding on those grounds, the State shall determine whether such withholding will actually occur, shall (within no more than 45 days after the provision of such advance notice) inform such parent of whether or not withholding will occur and (if so) of the date on which it is to begin, and shall furnish such parent with the information contained in any notice given to the employer under paragraph (6)(A) with respect to such withholding.

"(B) The requirement of advance notice set forth in the first sentence of subparagraph (A) shall not apply in the case of any State which has a system of income withholding for child support purposes in effect on the date of the enactment of this section if such system provides on that date, and continues to provide, such procedures as may be necessary to meet the procedural due process requirements of State law.

"(5) Such withholding must be administered by a public agency designated by the State, and the amounts withheld must be expeditiously distributed by the State or such agency in accordance with section 457 under procedures (specified by the State) adequate to document payments of support and to track and monitor such payments, except that the State may establish or permit the establishment of alternative procedures for the collection and distribution of such amounts (under the supervision of such public agency) otherwise than through such public agency so long as the entity making such collection and distribution is publicly accountable for its actions taken in carrying out such procedures, and so long as such procedures will assure prompt distribution, provide for the keeping of adequate records to document payments of support, and permit the tracking and monitoring of such payments.

"(6)(A)(i) The employer of any absent parent to whom paragraph (1) applies, upon being given notice as described in clause (ii), must be required to withhold from such absent parent's wages the amount specified by such notice (which may include a fee, established by the State, to be paid to the employer unless waived by such employer) and pay such amount (after deducting and retaining any portion thereof which represents the fee so established) to the appropriate agency (or other entity authorized to collect the amounts withheld under the alternative procedures described in paragraph (5)) for distribution in accordance with section 457.

"(ii) The notice given to the employer shall contain only such information as may be necessary for the employer to comply with the withholding order.

"(B) Methods must be established by the State to simplify the withholding process for employers to the greatest extent possible, including permitting any employer to combine all withheld amounts into a single payment to each appropriate agency or entity (with the portion thereof which is attributable to each individual employee being separately designated).

"(C) The employer must be held liable to the State for any amount which such employer fails to withhold from wages due an employee following receipt by such employer of proper notice under subparagraph (A), but such employer shall not be required to vary the normal pay and disbursement cycles in order to comply with this paragraph.

"(D) Provision must be made for the imposition of a fine against any employer who discharges from employment, refuses to employ, or takes disciplinary action against any absent parent subject to wage withholding required by this subsection because of the existence of such withholding and the obligations or additional obligations which it imposes upon the employer.

"(7) Support collection under this subsection must be given priority over any other legal process under State law against the same wages.

"(8) The State may take such actions as may be necessary to extend its system of withholding under this subsection so that such system will include withholding from forms of income other than wages, in order to assure that child support owed by absent parents in the State will be collected without regard to the types of such absent parents' income or the nature of their income-producing activities.

"(9) The State must extend its withholding system under this subsection so that such system will include withholding from income derived within such State in cases where the applicable support orders were issued in other States, in order to assure that child support owed by absent parents in such State or any other State will be collected without regard to the residence of the child for whom the support is payable or of such child's custodial parent.

"(10) Provision must be made for terminating withholding.

"(c) Any State may at its option, under its plan approved under section 454, establish procedures under which support payments under this part will be made through the State agency or other entity which administers the State's income withholding system in any case where either the absent parent or the custodial parent requests it, even though no arrearages in child support payments are involved and no income withholding procedures have been instituted; but in any such case an annual fee for handling and processing such payments, in an amount not exceeding the actual costs incurred by the State in connection therewith or $25, whichever is less, shall be imposed on the requesting parent by the State.

"(d) If a State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary, through the presentation to the Secretary of such data pertaining to caseloads, processing times, administrative costs, and average support collections, and such other data or estimates as the Secretary may specify, that the enactment of any law or the use of any procedure or procedures required by or pursuant to this section will not increase the effectiveness and efficiency of the State child support enforcement program, the Secretary may exempt the State, subject to the Secretary's continuing review and to termination of the exemption should circumstances change, from the requirement to enact the law or use the procedure or procedures involved.

"(e) For purposes of this section, the term 'overdue support' means the amount of a delinquency pursuant to an obligation determined under a court order, or an order of an administrative process established under State law, for support and maintenance of a minor child which is owed to or on behalf of such child, or for support and maintenance of the absent parent's spouse (or former spouse) with whom the child is living if and to the extent that spousal support (with respect to such spouse or former spouse) would be included for purposes of paragraph (4) or (6) of section 454. At the option of the State, overdue support may include amounts which otherwise meet the definition in the first sentence of this subsection but which are owed to or on behalf of a child who is not a minor child. The option to include support owed to children who are not minors shall apply independently to each procedure specified under this section.".

(c) Section 454(6)(B) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "(B) an application fee for furnishing such services shall be imposed, which shall be paid by the individual applying for such services, or recovered from the absent parent, or paid by the State out of its own funds (the payment of which from State funds shall not be considered as an administrative cost of the State for the operation of the plan, and shall be considered income to the program), the amount of which (i) will not exceed $25 (or such higher or lower amount (which shall be uniform for all States) as the Secretary may determine to be appropriate for any fiscal year to reflect increases or decreases in administrative costs), and (ii) may vary among such individuals on the basis of ability to pay (as determined by the State), and".

(d) Section 454 of such Act (as amended by subsection (a) of this section) is further amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (19);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (20) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding after paragraph (20) the following new paragraph:

"(21)(A) at the option of the State, impose a late payment fee on all overdue support (as defined in section 466(e)) under any obligation being enforced under this part, in an amount equal to a uniform percentage determined by the State (not less than 3 percent nor more than 6 percent) of the overdue support, which shall be payable by the absent parent owing the overdue support; and

"(B) assure that the fee will be collected in addition to, and only after full payment of, the overdue support, and that the imposition of the late payment fee shall not directly or indirectly result in a decrease in the amount of the support which is paid to the child (or spouse) to whom, or on whose behalf, it is owed.".

(e) Section 454(5) of such Act is amended by inserting after "directly to the family" the following: ", and the individual will be notified at least annually of the amount of the support payments collected;".

(f) Section 454 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof (after and below paragraph (21) (as added by subsection (d) of this section)) the following new sentence:

"The State may allow the jurisdiction which makes the collection involved to retain any application fee under paragraph (6)(B) or any late payment fee under paragraph (21).".

(g)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), the amendments made by this section shall become effective on October 1, 1985.

(2) Section 454(21) of the Social Security Act (as added by subsection (d) of this section), and section 466(e) of such Act (as added by subsection (b) of this section), shall be effective with respect to support owed for any month beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) In the case of a State with respect to which the Secretary of Health and Human Services has determined that State legislation is required in order to conform the State plan approved under part D of title IV of the Social Security Act to the requirements imposed by any amendment made by this section, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such part solely by reason of its failure to meet the requirements imposed by such amendment prior to the beginning of the fourth month beginning after the end of the first session of the State legislature which ends on or after October 1, 1985. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "session" means a regular, special, budget, or other session of a State legislature.

FEDERAL MATCHING OF ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS

SEC. 4. (a) Section 455(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)";

(2) by striking out ", beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1975,";

(3) by striking out paragraph (2) and redesignating paragraphs (1) and (3) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively;

(4) by amending paragraph (1)(A) as so redesignated to read as follows:

"(A) equal to the percent specified in paragraph (2) of the total amounts expended by such State during such quarter for the operation of the plan approved under section 454, and";

(5) in paragraph (1)(B) as so redesignated, by striking out "specified in clause (1) or (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "specified in subparagraph (A)"; and

(6) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) The percent applicable to quarters in a fiscal year for purposes of paragraph (1)(A) is—

"(A) 70 percent for fiscal years 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987,

"(B) 68 percent for fiscal years 1988 and 1989, and

"(C) 66 percent for fiscal year 1990 and each fiscal year thereafter.".

(b) Subsections (d)(1)(B), (d)(2)(A), (d)(2)(B), and (e) of section 452 of such Act are each amended by striking out "455(a)(3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "455(a)(1)(B)".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to fiscal years after fiscal year 1983.

FEDERAL INCENTIVE PAYMENTS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 458 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"INCENTIVE PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 458. (a) In order to encourage and reward State child support enforcement programs which perform in a cost-effective and efficient manner to secure support for all children who have sought assistance in securing support, whether such children reside within the State or elsewhere and whether or not they are eligible for aid to families with dependent children under a State plan approved under part A of this title, and regardless of the economic circumstances of their parents, the Secretary shall, from support collected which would otherwise represent the Federal share of assistance to families of absent parents, pay to each State for each fiscal year, on a quarterly basis (as described in subsection (e)) beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1985, an incentive payment in an amount determined under subsection (b).

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), the incentive payment shall be equal to—

"(A) 6 percent of the total amount of support collected under the plan during the fiscal year in cases in which the support obligation involved is assigned to the State pursuant to section 402(a)(26) or section 471(a)(17) (with such total amount for any fiscal year being hereafter referred to in this section as the State's 'AFDC collections' for that year), plus

"(B) 6 percent of the total amount of support collected during the fiscal year in all other cases under this part (with such total amount for any fiscal year being hereafter referred to in this section as the State's 'non-AFDC collections' for that year).

"(2) If subsection (c) applies with respect to a State's AFDC collections or non-AFDC collections for any fiscal year, the percent specified in paragraph (1)(A) or (B) (with respect to such collections) shall be increased to the higher percent determined under such subsection (with respect to such collections) in determining the State's incentive payment under this subsection for that year.

"(3) The dollar amount of the portion of the State's incentive payment for any fiscal year which is determined on the basis of its non-AFDC collections under paragraph (1)(B) (after adjustment under subsection (c) if applicable) shall in no case exceed—

"(A) the dollar amount of the portion of such payment which is determined on the basis of its AFDC collections under paragraph (1)(A) (after adjustment under subsection (c) if applicable) in the case of fiscal year 1986 or 1987;

"(B) 105 percent of such dollar amount in the case of fiscal year 1988;

"(C) 110 percent of such dollar amount in the case of fiscal year 1989; or

"(D) 115 percent of such dollar amount in the case of fiscal year 1990 or any fiscal year thereafter.

"(4) The Secretary shall make such additional payments to the State under this part, for fiscal year 1986 or 1987, as may be necessary to assure that the total amount of payments under this section and section 455(a)(1)(A) for such fiscal year is no less than 80 percent of the amount that would have been payable to that State and its political subdivisions for such fiscal year under this section and section 455(a)(1)(A) if those sections (including the amendment made by section 5(c)(2)(A) of the Child Support Enforcement Amendments of 1984) had remained in effect as they were in effect for fiscal year 1985.

"(c) If the total amount of a State's AFDC collections or non-AFDC collections for any fiscal year bears a ratio to the total amount expended by the State in that year for the operation of its plan approved under section 454 for which payment may be made under section 455 (with the total amount so expended in any fiscal year being hereafter referred to in this section as the State's 'combined AFDC/non-AFDC administrative costs' for that year) which is equal to or greater than 1.4, the relevant percent specified in subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b)(1) (with respect to such collections) shall be increased to—

"(1) 6.5 percent, plus

"(2) one-half of 1 percent for each full two-tenths by which such ratio exceeds 1.4; except that the percent so specified shall in no event be increased (for either AFDC collections or non-AFDC collections) to more than 10 percent. For purposes of the preceding sentence, laboratory costs incurred in determining paternity in any fiscal year may at the option of the State be excluded from the State's combined AFDC/non-AFDC administrative costs for that year.

"(d) In computing incentive payments under this section, support which is collected by one State on behalf of individuals residing in another State shall be treated as having been collected in full by each such State.

"(e) The amounts of the incentive payments to be made to the various States under this section for any fiscal year shall be estimated by the Secretary at or before the beginning of such year on the basis of the best information available. The Secretary shall make such payments for such year, on a quarterly basis (with each quarterly payment being made no later than the beginning of the quarter involved), in the amounts so estimated, reduced or increased to the extent of any overpayments or underpayments which the Secretary determines were made under this section to the States involved for prior periods and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under this subsection. Upon the making of any estimate by the Secretary under the preceding sentence, any appropriations available for payments under this section shall be deemed obligated.".

(b) Section 454 of such Act (as amended by subsections (a), (d), and (f) of section 3 of this Act) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (20);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (21) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (21) the following new paragraph:

"(22) in order for the State to be eligible to receive any incentive payments under section 458, provide that, if one or more political subdivisions of the State participate in the costs of carrying out activities under the State plan during any period, each such subdivision shall be entitled to receive an appropriate share (as determined by the State) of any such incentive payments made to the State for such period, taking into account the efficiency and effectiveness of the activities carried out under the State plan by such political subdivision.".

(c)(1) The amendments made by the preceding provisions of this section shall become effective on October 1, 1985.

(2)(A) Effective until September 30, 1985, section 458(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "distributed as provided in section 457 to reduce or repay assistance payments" and inserting in lieu thereof "distributed as provided in paragraphs (1), (2), and (4)(A) of section 457(b)".

(B) The reference to provisions of section 457(b) of the Social Security Act in the amendment made by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph is a reference to such provisions as in effect after the effective date of section 2640(b) of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

90-PERCENT MATCHING FOR AUTOMATED MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS USED IN INCOME WITHHOLDING AND OTHER REQUIRED PROCEDURES

SEC. 6. (a) Section 454(16) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "and (D)" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(D) to facilitate the development and improvement of the income withholding and other procedures required under section 466(a) through the monitoring of support payments, the maintenance of accurate records regarding the payment of support, and the prompt provision of notice to appropriate officials with respect to any arrearages in support payments which may occur, and (E)".

(b) Section 455(a)(1)(B) of such Act (as redesignated by section 4(a) of this Act) is amended—

(1) by inserting after "automatic data processing and information retrieval system" the following: "(including in such sums the full cost of the hardware components of such system)"; and

(2) by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or meets such requirements without regard to clause (D) thereof".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to quarters beginning on or after October 1, 1984.

CONTINUATION OF SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT FOR AFDC RECIPIENTS WHOSE BENEFITS ARE BEING TERMINATED

SEC. 7. (a) Section 457(c) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "may" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "shall"; and

(2) by striking out "the net amount of" in paragraph (2), and by striking out "to the family" and all that follows in such paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "to the family (without requiring any formal reapplication and without the imposition of any application fee) on the same basis as in the case of other individuals who are not receiving assistance under part A of this title,".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall become effective October 1, 1984.

SPECIAL PROJECT GRANTS TO PROMOTE IMPROVEMENTS IN INTERSTATE ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 8. Section 455 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) In order to encourage and promote the development and use of more effective methods of enforcing support obligations under this part in cases where either the children on whose behalf the support is sought or their absent parents do not reside in the State where such cases are filed, the Secretary is authorized to make grants, in such amounts and on such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines to be appropriate, to States which propose to undertake new or innovative methods of support collection in such cases and which will use the proceeds of such grants to carry out special projects designed to demonstrate and test such methods.

"(2) A grant under this subsection shall be made only upon a finding by the Secretary that the project involved is likely to be of significant assistance in carrying out the purpose of this subsection; and with respect to such project the Secretary may waive any of the requirements of this part which would otherwise be applicable, to such extent and for such period as the Secretary determines is necessary or desirable in order to enable the State to carry out the project.

"(3) At the time of its application for a grant under this subsection the State shall submit to the Secretary a statement describing in reasonable detail the project for which the proceeds of the grant are to be used, and the State shall from time to time thereafter submit to the Secretary such reports with respect to the project as the Secretary may specify.

"(4) Amounts expended by a State in carrying out a special project assisted under this section shall be considered, for purposes of section 458(b) (as amended by section 5(a) of the Child Support Enforcement Amendments of 1984), to have been expended for the operation of the State's plan approved under section 454.

"(5) There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $7,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $12,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $15,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter, to be used by the Secretary in making grants under this subsection.".

PERIODIC REVIEW OF EFFECTIVENESS OF STATE PROGRAMS; MODIFICATION OF PENALTY

SEC. 9. (a)(1) Section 452(a)(4) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "not less often than annually" and inserting in lieu thereof "not less often than once every three years (or not less often than annually in the case of any State to which a reduction is being applied under section 403(h)(1), or which is operating under a corrective action plan in accordance with section 403(h)(2))".

(2) Section 402(a)(27) of such Act is amended by striking out "operates a child support program in conformity with such plan" and inserting in lieu thereof "operates a child support program in substantial compliance with such plan".

(b) Section 403(h) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, if a State's program operated under part D is found as a result of a review conducted under section 452(a)(4) not to have complied substantially with the requirements of such part for any quarter beginning after September 30, 1983, and the Secretary determines that the State's program is not complying substantially with such requirements at the time such finding is made, the amounts otherwise payable to the State under this part for such quarter and each subsequent quarter, prior to the first quarter throughout which the State program is found to be in substantial compliance with such requirements, shall be reduced (subject to paragraph (2)) by—

"(A) not less than one nor more than two percent, or

"(B) not less than two nor more than three percent, if the finding is the second consecutive such finding made as a result of such a review, or

"(C) not less than three nor more than five percent, if the finding is the third or a subsequent consecutive such finding made as a result of such a review.

"(2)(A) The reductions required under paragraph (1) shall be suspended for any quarter if—

"(i) the State submits a corrective action plan, within a period prescribed by the Secretary following notice of the finding under paragraph (1), which contains steps necessary to achieve substantial compliance within a time period which the Secretary finds to be appropriate;

"(ii) the Secretary approves such corrective action plan (and any amendments thereto) as being sufficient to achieve substantial compliance; and

"(iii) the Secretary finds that the corrective action plan (and any amendment thereto approved by the Secretary under clause (ii)), is being fully implemented by the State and that the State is progressing in accordance with the timetable contained in the plan to achieve substantial compliance with such requirements.

"(B) A suspension of the penalty under subparagraph (A) shall continue until such time as the Secretary determines that—

"(i) the State has achieved substantial compliance,

"(ii) the State is no longer implementing its corrective action plan, or

"(iii) the State is implementing or has implemented its corrective action plan but has failed to achieve substantial compliance within the appropriate time period (as specified in subparagraph (A)(i)).

"(C)(i) In the case of a State whose penalty suspension ends pursuant to subparagraph (B)(i), the penalty shall not be applied.

"(ii) In the case of a State whose penalty suspension ends pursuant to subparagraph (B)(ii), the penalty shall be applied as if the suspension had not occurred.

"(iii) In the case of a State whose penalty suspension ends pursuant to subparagraph (B)(iii), the penalty shall be applied to all quarters ending after the expiration of the time period specified in such subparagraph (and prior to the first quarter throughout which the State program is found to be in substantial compliance).

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, section 402(a)(27), and section 452(a)(4), a State which is not in full compliance with the requirements of this part shall be determined to be in substantial compliance with such requirements only if the Secretary determines that any noncompliance with such requirements is of a technical nature which does not adversely affect the performance of the child support enforcement program.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective on and after October 1, 1983.

EXTENSION OF SECTION 1115 DEMONSTRATION AUTHORITY TO CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM

SEC. 10. (a) Section 1115(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "part A" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "part A or D";

(2) by striking out "402," in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "402, 454,"; and

(3) by striking out "403," in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "403, 455,".

(b) Section 1115 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) In the case of any experimental, pilot, or demonstration project undertaken under subsection (a) to assist in promoting the objectives of part D of title IV, the project—

"(1) must be designed to improve the financial well-being of children or otherwise improve the operation of the child support program;

"(2) may not permit modifications in the child support program which would have the effect of disadvantaging children in need of support; and

"(3) must not result in increased cost to the Federal Government under the program of aid to families with dependent children.".

CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT FOR CERTAIN CHILDREN IN FOSTER CARE

SEC. 11. (a)(1) Section 457 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section, amounts collected by a State as child support for months in any period on behalf of a child for whom a public agency is making foster care maintenance payments under part E—

"(1) shall be retained by the State to the extent necessary to reimburse it for the foster care maintenance payments made with respect to the child during such period (with appropriate reimbursement of the Federal Government to the extent of its participation in the financing);

"(2) shall be paid to the public agency responsible for supervising the placement of the child to the extent that the amounts collected exceed the foster care maintenance payments made with respect to the child during such period but not the amounts required by a court or administrative order to be paid as support on behalf of the child during such period; and the responsible agency may use the payments in the manner it determines will serve the best interests of the child, including setting such payments aside for the child's future needs or making all or a part thereof available to the person responsible for meeting the child's day-to-day needs; and

"(3) shall be retained by the State, if any portion of the amounts collected remains after making the payments required under paragraphs (1) and (2), to the extent that such portion is necessary to reimburse the State (with appropriate reimbursement to the Federal Government to the extent of its participation in the financing) for any past foster care maintenance payments (or payments of aid to families with dependent children) which were made with respect to the child (and with respect to which past collections have not previously been retained); and any balance shall be paid to the State agency responsible for supervising the placement of the child, for use by such agency in accordance with paragraph (2).".

(2) Section 457(b) of such Act is amended by inserting "(subject to subsection (d))" after "shall" in the matter preceding paragraph (1).

(b) Part D of title IV of such Act is further amended—

(1) in section 454(4)(B), by inserting "including an assignment with respect to a child on whose behalf a State agency is making foster care maintenance payments under part E," immediately after "such assignment is effective,", and by inserting "or E" immediately after "part A"; and

(2) in section 456(a), by inserting "or secured on behalf of a child receiving foster care maintenance payments" immediately after "section 402(a)(26)".

(c) Section 471(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (15);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (16) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(17) provides that, where appropriate, all steps will be taken, including cooperative efforts with the State agencies administering the plans approved under parts A and D, to secure an assignment to the State of any rights to support on behalf of each child receiving foster care maintenance payments under this part.".

(d) Section 464(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or section 471(a)(17)" after "402(a)(26)"; and

(2) by striking out "457(b)(3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "457(b)(4) or (d)(3)".

(e) The amendments made by this section shall become effective October 1, 1984, and shall apply to collections made on or after that date.

ENFORCEMENT WITH RESPECT TO BOTH CHILD AND SPOUSAL SUPPORT

SEC. 12. (a) Section 454(4)(B) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and, at the option of the State," and inserting in lieu thereof ", and"; and

(2) by inserting ", and only if the support obligation established with respect to the child is being enforced under the plan" immediately after "but only if a support obligation has been established with respect to such spouse".

(b) Clause (A) of section 454(6) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out ", at the option of the State,"; and

(2) by inserting ", and only if the support obligation established with respect to the child is being enforced under the plan" immediately after "but only if a support obligation has been established with respect to such spouse".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall become effective October 1, 1985.

MODIFICATIONS IN CONTENT OF ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY

SEC. 13. (a) Section 452(a)(10)(C) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(C) the following data, with the data required under each clause being separately stated for cases where the child is receiving aid to families with dependent children (or foster care maintenance payments under part E), cases where the child was formerly receiving such aid or payments and the State is continuing to collect support assigned to it under section 402(a)(26) or 471(a)(17), and all other cases under this part:

"(i) the total number of cases in which a support obligation has been established in the fiscal year for which the report is submitted, and the total amount of such obligations;

"(ii) the total number of cases in which a support obligation has been established, and the total amount of such obligations;

"(iii) the number of cases described in clause (i) in which support was collected during such fiscal year, and the total amount of such collections;

"(iv) the number of cases described in clause (ii) in which support was collected during such fiscal year, and the total amount of such collections; and

"(v) the number of child support cases filed in each State in such fiscal year, and the amount of the collections made in each State in such fiscal year, on behalf of children residing in another State or against parents residing in another State;".

(b) Section 452(a) (10) of such Act is further amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (G);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (H) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by inserting immediately after subparagraph (H) the following new subparagraph:

"(I) the amount of administrative costs which are expended in each functional category of expenditures, including establishment of paternity.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective for reports for fiscal year 1986 and each fiscal year thereafter.

REQUIREMENT THAT AVAILABILITY OF CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT SERVICES BE PUBLICIZED

SEC. 14. (a) Section 454 of the Social Security Act (as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act) is further amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (21);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (22) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (22) the following new paragraph:

"(23) provide that the State will regularly and frequently publicize, through public service announcements, the availability of child support enforcement services under the plan and otherwise, including information as to any application fees for such services and a telephone number or postal address at which further information may be obtained.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall become effective October 1, 1985.

STATE COMMISSIONS ON CHILD SUPPORT

SEC. 15. (a) As a condition of the State's eligibility for Federal payments under part A or D of title IV of the Social Security Act for quarters beginning more than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and ending prior to October 1, 1985, the Governor of each State, on or before December 1, 1984, shall (subject to subsection (f)) appoint a State Commission on Child Support.

(b) Each State Commission appointed under subsection (a) shall be composed of members appropriately representing all aspects of the child support system, including custodial and non-custodial parents, the agency or organizational unit administering the State's plan under part D of such title IV, the State judiciary, the executive and legislative branches of the State government, child welfare and social services agencies, and others.

(c) It shall be the function of each State Commission to examine, investigate, and study the operation of the State's child support system for the primary purpose of determining the extent to which such system has been successful in securing support and parental involvement both for children who are eligible for aid under a State plan approved under part A of title IV of such Act and for children who are not eligible for such aid, giving particular attention to such specific problems (among others) as visitation, the establishment of appropriate objective standards for support, the enforcement of interstate obligations, the availability, cost, and effectiveness of services both to children who are eligible for such aid and to children who are not, and the need for additional State or Federal legislation to obtain support for all children.

(d) Each State Commission shall submit to the Governor of the State and make available to the public, no later than October 1, 1985, a full and complete report of its findings and recommendations resulting from the examination, investigation, and study under this section. The Governor shall transmit such report to the Secretary of Health and Human Services along with the Governor's comments thereon.

(e) None of the costs incurred in the establishment and operation of a State Commission under this section, or incurred by such a Commission in carrying out its functions under subsections (c) and (d), shall be considered as expenditures qualifying for Federal payments under part A or D of title IV of the Social Security Act or be otherwise payable or reimbursable by the United States or any agency thereof.

(f) If the Secretary determines, at the request of any State on the basis of information submitted by the State and such other information as may be available to the Secretary, that such State—

(1) has placed in effect and is implementing objective standards for the determination and enforcement of child support obligations,

(2) has established within the five years prior to the enactment of this Act a commission or council with substantially the same functions as the State Commissions provided for under this section, or

(3) is making satisfactory progress toward fully effective child support enforcement and will continue to do so, then such State shall not be required to establish a State Commission under this section and the preceding provisions of this section shall not apply.

INCLUSION OF MEDICAL SUPPORT IN CHILD SUPPORT ORDERS

SEC. 16. Section 452 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) The Secretary shall issue regulations to require that State agencies administering the child support enforcement program under this part petition for the inclusion of medical support as part of any child support order whenever health care coverage is available to the absent parent at a reasonable cost. Such regulation shall also provide for improved information exchange between such State agencies and the State agencies administering the State medicaid programs under title XIX with respect to the availability of health insurance coverage.".

INCREASED AVAILABILITY OF FEDERAL PARENT LOCATOR SERVICE TO STATE AGENCIES

SEC. 17. Section 453(f) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out ", after determining that the absent parent cannot be located through the procedures under the control of such State agencies,".

STATE GUIDELINES FOR CHILD SUPPORT AWARDS

SEC. 18. (a) Part D of title IV of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 3(b) of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"STATE GUIDELINES FOR CHILD SUPPORT AWARDS

"SEC. 467. (a) Each State, as a condition for having its State plan approved under this part, must establish guidelines for child support award amounts within the State. The guidelines may be established by law or by judicial or administrative action.

"(b) The guidelines established pursuant to subsection (a) shall be made available to all judges and other officials who have the power to determine child support awards within such State, but need not be binding upon such judges or other officials.

"(c) The Secretary shall furnish technical assistance to the States for establishing the guidelines, and each State shall furnish the Secretary with copies of its guidelines.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on October 1, 1987.

AVAILABILITY OF SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS FOR CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT PURPOSES

SEC. 19. (a) Section 453(b) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "the social security account number (or numbers, if the individual involved has more than one such number) and" before "the most recent address".

(b)(1) Section 6103(l)(6)(A)(i) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by inserting "social security account number (or numbers, if the individual involved has more than one such number)," before "address".

(2) Section 6103(l)(8)(A) of such Code is amended by inserting "social security account numbers," before "net earnings".

EXTENSION OF ELIGIBILITY UNDER TITLE XIX WHEN SUPPORT COLLECTION RESULTS IN TERMINATION OF AFDC ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 20. (a) Section 406 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) Each dependent child, and each relative with whom such a child is living (including the spouse of such relative as described in subsection (b)), who becomes ineligible for aid to families with dependent children as a result (wholly or partly) of the collection or increased collection of child or spousal support under part D, and who has received such aid in at least three of the six months immediately preceding the month in which such ineligibility begins, shall be deemed to be a recipient of aid to families with dependent children for purposes of title XIX for an additional four calendar months beginning with the month in which such ineligibility begins.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply only with respect to individuals becoming ineligible for aid to families with dependent children (as described in section 406(h) of the Social Security Act as added by such subsection) on or after the date of the enactment of this Act and before October 1, 1988.

(c) Section 1902(a)(10)(A)(i)(I) of such Act is amended by inserting "or 406(h)" after "402(a)(37)".

COLLECTION OF PAST-DUE SUPPORT FROM FEDERAL TAX REFUNDS

SEC. 21. (a) Section 464(a) of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 12(d) of this Act) is further amended by inserting "(1)" after "SEC. 464. (a)" and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2)(A) Upon receiving notice from a State agency administering a plan approved under this part that a named individual owes past-due support (as that term is defined for purposes of this paragraph under subsection (c)) which such State has agreed to collect under section 454(6), and that the State agency has sent notice to such individual in accordance with paragraph (3)(A), the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine whether any amounts, as refunds of Federal taxes paid, are payable to such individual (regardless of whether such individual filed a tax return as a married or unmarried individual). If the Secretary of the Treasury finds that any such amount is payable, he shall withhold from such refunds an amount equal to such past-due support, and shall concurrently send notice to such individual that the withholding has been made, including in or with such notice a notification to any other person who may have filed a joint return with such individual of the steps which such other person may take in order to secure his or her proper share of the refund. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount withheld to the State agency, and the State shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury any fee imposed by the Secretary of the Treasury to cover the costs of the withholding and any required notification. The State agency shall, subject to paragraph (3)(B), distribute such amount to or on behalf of the child to whom the support was owed.

"(B) This paragraph shall apply only with respect to refunds payable under section 6402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 after December 31, 1985, and before January 1, 1991.

"(3)(A) Prior to notifying the Secretary of the Treasury under paragraph (1) or (2) that an individual owes past-due support, the State shall send notice to such individual that a withholding will be made from any refund otherwise payable to such individual. The notice shall also (i) instruct the individual owing the past-due support of the steps which may be taken to contest the State's determination that past-due support is owed or the amount of the past-due support, and (ii) provide information, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services by regulation in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, with respect to procedures to be followed, in the case of a joint return, to protect the share of the refund which may be payable to another person.

"(B) If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that an amount should be withheld under paragraph (1) or (2), and that the refund from which it should be withheld is based upon a joint return, the Secretary of the Treasury shall notify the State that the withholding is being made from a refund based upon a joint return, and shall furnish to the State the names and addresses of each taxpayer filing such joint return. In the case of a withholding under paragraph (2), the State may delay distribution of the amount withheld until the State has been notified by the Secretary of the Treasury that the other person filing the joint return has received his or her proper share of the refund, but such delay may not exceed six months.

"(C) If the other person filing the joint return with the named individual owing the past-due support takes appropriate action to secure his or her proper share of a refund from which a withholding was made under paragraph (1) or (2), the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay such share to such other person. The Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct the amount of such payment from amounts subsequently payable to the State agency to which the amount originally withheld from such refund was paid.

"(D) In any case in which an amount was withheld under paragraph (1) or (2) and paid to a State, and the State subsequently determines that the amount certified as past-due support was in excess of the amount actually owed at the time the amount withheld is to be distributed to or on behalf of the child, the State shall pay the excess amount withheld to the named individual thought to have owed the past-due support (or, in the case of amounts withheld on the basis of a joint return, jointly to the parties filing such return).".

(b)(1) Section 464(a)(1) of such Act (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended by striking out "and pay" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall concurrently send notice to such individual that the withholding has been made (including in or with such notice a notification to any other person who may have filed a joint return with such individual of the steps which such other person may take in order to secure his or her proper share of the refund), and shall pay".

(2) Section 464(b) of such Act is amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" after "(b)";

(B) by striking out "The regulations shall specify" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "The regulations shall be consistent with the provisions of subsection (a)(3), shall specify";

(C) by striking out "and provide" and inserting in lieu thereof "and shall provide";

(D) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) as so redesignated the following: "Any fee paid to the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to this subsection may be used to reimburse appropriations which bore all or part of the cost of applying such procedure."; and

(E) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) In the case of withholdings made under subsection (a)(2), the regulations promulgated pursuant to this subsection shall include the following requirements:

"(A) The withholding shall apply only in the case where the State determines that the amount of the past-due support which will be owed at the time the withholding is to be made, based upon the pattern of payment of support and other enforcement actions being pursued to collect the past-due support, is equal to or greater than $500. The State may limit the $500 threshhold amount to amounts of past-due support accrued since the time that the State first began to enforce the child support order involved under the State plan, and may limit the application of the withholding to past-due support accrued since such time.

"(B) The fee which the Secretary of the Treasury may impose to cover the costs of the withholding and notification may not exceed $25 per case submitted.".

(c) Section 464(c) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "(c) As used in this part" and inserting in lieu thereof "(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), as used in this part"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) For purposes of subsection (a)(2), the term 'past-due support' means only past-due support owed to or on behalf of a minor child.".

(d) Section 454(6) of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 3(c) of this Act) is further amended—

(1) by redesignating clause (C) as clause (D);

(2) by striking out "fee so imposed" in clause (D) as so redesignated and inserting in lieu thereof "fees so imposed"; and

(3) by striking out ", and" at the end of clause (B) and inserting in lieu thereof ", (C) a fee of not more than $25 may be imposed in any case where the State requests the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold past-due support owed to or on behalf of such individual from a tax refund pursuant to section 464(a)(2), and".

(e)(1) Section 6402(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended—

(A) by striking out "to which such support has been assigned" and inserting in lieu thereof "collecting such support"; and

(B) by inserting before the last sentence thereof the following: "A reduction under this subsection shall be applied first to satisfy any past-due support which has been assigned to the State under section 402(a)(26) or 471(a)(17) of the Social Security Act, and shall be applied to satisfy any other past-due support after any other reductions allowed by law (but before a credit against future liability for an internal revenue tax) have been made.".

(2) Section 6402 of such Code (as amended by section 2653 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984) is further amended by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (h), and by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection:

"(g) TREATMENT OF PAYMENTS TO STATES.—The Secretary may provide that, for purposes of determining interest, the payment of any amount withheld under subsection (c) to a State shall be treated as a payment to the person or persons making the overpayment.".

(f)(1) Section 6103(l) of such Code (as so amended) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) DISCLOSURE OF CERTAIN INFORMATION TO AGENCIES REQUESTING A REDUCTION UNDER SECTION 6402(c).—

"(A) RETURN INFORMATION FROM INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE.—The Secretary shall, upon receiving a written request, disclose to officers and employees of a State agency seeking a reduction under section 6402(c)—

"(i) the fact that a reduction has been made or has not been made under such subsection with respect to any taxpayer;

"(ii) the amount of such reduction;

"(iii) whether such taxpayer filed a joint return;

"(iv) Taxpayer Identity information with respect to the taxpayer against whom a reduction was made or not made and of any other person filing a joint return with such taxpayer; and

"(v) the fact that a payment was made (and the amount of the payment) on the basis of a joint return in accordance with section 464(a)(3) of the Social Security Act.

"(B) RESTRICTION ON USE OF DISCLOSED INFORMATION.—Any officers and employees of an agency receiving return information under subparagraph (A) shall use such information only for the purposes of, and to the extent necessary in, establishing appropriate agency records or in the defense of any litigation or administrative procedure ensuing from a reduction made under section 6402(c).".

(2) Section 6103(p)(3)(A) of such Code (as so amended) is further amended by striking out "or (10)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(10), or (11)".

(3) Section 6103(p)(4) of such Code (as so amended) is further amended by striking out "or (10)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(10), or (11)".

(4) Section 6103(p)(4)(F)(ii) of such Code (as so amended) is further amended by striking out "or (10)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(10), or (11)".

(5) Section 7213(a)(2) of such Code (as so amended) is further amended by striking out "or (10)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(10), or (11)".

(g) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to refunds payable under section 6402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 after December 31, 1985.

WISCONSIN CHILD SUPPORT INITIATIVE

SEC. 22. (a)(1) If the State of Wisconsin requests the Secretary of Health and Human Services to waive the requirements of parts A and D of title IV of the Social Security Act, or to waive the requirements of part D and only those requirements of part A of such Act as relate to the provision of aid to dependent children as defined (without regard to section 407) in section 406(a) of the Social Security Act (hereafter referred to in this section as "dependent children in single-parent families"), in order to permit the State to make an adequate test in any county or counties, or throughout the State, of its Child Support Initiative, the Secretary shall waive such requirements if—

(A) the State provides a complete description, in accordance with paragraph (2), of the program, known as the Initiative, which it will operate in place of the programs under such parts A and D, and makes the description readily available to the public throughout the State;

(B) the Governor provides assurances that, under the Initiative, assistance will be provided to all children in need of financial support, and the State will continue to operate an effective child support enforcement program;

(C) the State agrees that, during the conduct of such test, it will continue to determine eligibility for medical assistance under the State plan approved under title XIX of the Social Security Act, applying the criteria (insofar as may be applicable to members of families with dependent children affected by the Initiative) in effect under its State plan approved under part A of title IV for the month preceding the month in which the Initiative (approved under this section) becomes effective, except that such criteria shall be deemed to have been changed to the extent necessary to comply with generally applicable changes in Federal law or regulations occurring after the date of the enactment of this Act;

(D) the State specifies measurable performance objectives, submits an evaluation plan (including criteria for evaluating the Initiative), and agrees to submit interim and final evaluations and reports, at such time or times and containing such information, as the Secretary may require; and

(E) the State agrees to obtain, at least once every two years, a financial and compliance audit of the funds received under this section and to obtain, after the close of the operation of the Initiative under this section, such an audit and make it public within the State on a timely basis and provide a copy to the Secretary within 30 days after its completion.

(2) The program description provided under paragraph (1)(A) shall describe in detail how the proposed Initiative will affect children and families, with specific reference to the principles for calculating benefits and establishing and enforcing child support obligations. The description shall also include estimates of cost and program effects and provide other relevant information necessary for the Secretary to determine whether the financial well-being of children and their families will be adversely affected by the operation of the Initiative.

(b) The Child Support Initiative proposed by the State of Wisconsin as detailed in the program description submitted to the Secretary, and the related requested waivers, shall become effective within 120 days after its submission unless the Secretary determines that the financial well-being of children in the State will be adversely affected by the Initiative. The Secretary shall notify the State in writing that, effective with the beginning of the following quarter (or of such later quarter as the State may select), the State may operate its Child Support Initiative instead of its programs of aid to families with dependent children (or, if the State had so requested, instead of its program of aid to dependent children in single-parent families) and child support enforcement in such county or counties, or on a statewide basis, as the State has indicated in its request. Except as specifically provided in subsection (c), no amount will be payable for any quarter under section 403(a) (or under section 403(a) with respect to single-parent families, if the State had so requested), 455(a), or 458 of the Social Security Act with respect to such county or counties in which the Initiative is in effect.

(c)(1) For each quarter during which such program is in effect throughout the State, the Secretary will pay to the State the sum of its proportionate share (as defined in paragraph (4)(A)) of each of the following:

(A) the amount advanced by the Secretary to all the other States (as defined in section 1101(a) of the Social Security Act) for such quarter with respect to section 403(a)(1) and (2) of such Act;

(B) the amount so advanced by the Secretary with respect to section 403(a)(3) of such Act;

(C) the amount so advanced by the Secretary with respect to section 455(a) of such Act; and

(D) the amount so advanced by the Secretary with respect to section 458(a) of such Act, reduced by so much of its proportionate share of support collections on behalf of individuals receiving aid to families with dependent children (as defined in paragraph (4)(B)) as would have been credited to the Federal Government under section 457(b) of such Act had such collections been made in the last quarter of fiscal year 1986.

(2) If in any quarter the Initiative approved under this section is in operation in fewer than all the counties in the State, the amount paid to the State with respect to the counties to which the waiver under subsection (a) applies shall equal (in lieu of the amount specified in paragraph (1)) the proportionate share with respect to the counties in which the Initiative is operated (as defined in paragraph (5)(A)) of the amount advanced to the State under the four authorities specified in paragraph (1) with respect to all the other counties for such quarter, reduced by so much of the proportionate share of support collections (as defined in paragraph (5)(B)) with respect to the counties in which the Initiative is operated, as would have been credited to the Federal Government under section 457(b) of such Act had such collections been made in the last quarter of fiscal year 1986.

(3) Payment under this subsection shall be estimated by the Secretary before the beginning of each quarter during which the Initiative is in effect on the basis of the advances made under parts A and D of title IV of the Social Security Act for such quarter, and the Secretary shall make payments for such quarter on a monthly basis (with each payment made no later than the beginning of the month involved), in the amounts so estimated, and adjusted as necessary to reflect the amount of any previously made overpayment or underpayment under this section. Payment of any amount determined with respect to paragraphs (1)(A) and (1)(B) shall be made from amounts appropriated to carry out part A of title IV of the Social Security Act for the appropriate fiscal year; payment of any amount determined with respect to paragraphs (1)(C) and (1)(D) shall be made from amounts appropriated to carry out part D of title IV of the Social Security Act.

(4)(A) The State's proportionate share of each amount enumerated in paragraph (1) shall be the portion of such amount that bears the same ratio to such amount as the corresponding portion advanced to the State for quarters in fiscal years 1984 through 1986 bears to the total corresponding amount advanced to all the other States for such quarters.

(B) The State's proportionate share of support collections means the amount that bears the same ratio to such collections on behalf of individuals receiving aid to families with dependent children by all the other States for the quarter involved as such collections by the State for quarters in fiscal years 1984 through 1986 bear to the total of such collections by all the other States for such quarters.

(5)(A) The proportionate share with respect to the counties in which the Initiative is operated, in the case of—

(i) the amount advanced to the State with respect to all other counties under section 403(a)(1) of the Social Security Act;

(ii) the amount so advanced under section 403(a)(3) of such Act;

(iii) the amount so advanced under section 455(a) of such Act; and

(iv) the amount so advanced with respect to section 458(a) of such Act, is the sum of such amounts, each having been multiplied by the ratio of (I) the corresponding amount advanced with respect to such counties for all quarters in fiscal years 1984 through 1986 to (II) the corresponding amount advanced with respect to all the other counties in the State for all such quarters.

(B) The proportionate share of support collections for any quarter, with respect to the counties in which the Initiative is operated, means the amount that bears the same ratio to such collections on behalf of individuals receiving aid to families with dependent children with respect to all the other counties in the State for such quarter as such collections by such counties for quarters in fiscal years 1984 through 1986 bear to the total of such collections by all the other counties in the State for such quarters.

(6) If the State requests, under subsection (a), waiver of only those requirements under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act as relate to the provision of aid to dependent children in single-parent families, and continues to operate its program of aid to families with dependent children deprived by reason of the unemployment of a parent—

(A) the State's proportionate share of the amount specified in paragraph (1)(A) (and only that amount) shall be computed under paragraph (4) by application of the ratio of (i) the amount advanced to the State, under section 403(a)(1) of the Social Security Act for quarters in fiscal years 1984 through 1986 with respect to expenditures in the form of aid to dependent children in single-parent families, to (ii) the amount advanced to all the other States, under section 403(a)(1) and (2) of such Act with respect to such expenditures, rather than by application of the ratio specified in paragraph (4); and

(B) part A of title IV of such Act shall continue to apply to the State's program of aid to families with dependent children deprived by reason of the unemployment of a parent; except that section 403(a)(3) shall not apply during the period that, or in the part or parts of the State where, the Initiative is in effect.

(d)(1) The State may cease to conduct the Initiative under this section and (if it so chooses) return to the administration of its plans approved under part A and part D of title IV of the Social Security Act upon the provision to the Secretary of at least 3 months advance notice (or such greater advance notice as may be necessary so that administration of such plans will resume at the beginning of a quarter in the fiscal year).

(2) The Secretary may terminate approval of the Initiative upon the giving of at least 3 months advance notice (or such greater advance notice as may be necessary as specified in paragraph (1)) to the State if it is determined that the financial well-being of children in the State (or county or counties involved) would be better achieved by the operation of programs under part A and part D of title IV of the Social Security Act.

(e) This section shall be in effect for quarters beginning after September 30, 1986, and ending before October 1, 1994.

SENSE OF THE CONGRESS THAT STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS SHOULD FOCUS ON THE PROBLEMS OF CHILD CUSTODY, CHILD SUPPORT, AND RELATED DOMESTIC ISSUES

SEC. 23. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the divorce rate in the United States has reached alarming proportions and the number of children being raised in single parent families has grown accordingly;

(2) there is a critical lack of child support enforcement, which Congress has undertaken to address through the child support enforcement program;

(3) Congress is strengthening that program to recognize the needs of all children;

(4) related domestic issues, such as visitation rights and child custody, are often intricately intertwined with the child support problem and have received inadequate consideration; and

(5) these related issues remain within the jurisdiction of State and local governments, but have a critical impact on the health and welfare of the children of the Nation.

(b) It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) State and local governments must focus on the vital issues of child support, child custody, visitation rights, and other related domestic issues that are properly within the jurisdictions of such governments;

(2) all individuals involved in the domestic relations process should recognize the seriousness of these matters to the health and welfare of our Nation's children and assign them the highest priority; and

(3) a mutual recognition of the needs of all parties involved in divorce actions will greatly enhance the health and welfare of America's children and families.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4325) to assure, through mandatory income withholding, incentive payments to the States, and other improvements in the child support enforcement program, that all children in the United States who are in need of assistance in securing financial support from their parents will receive such assistance regardless of their circumstances, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

Title IV-D of the Social Security Act authorizes funds for the purpose of "enforcing the support obligations owed by absent parents to their children and the spouse (or former spouse) with whom such children are living, locating absent parents, establishing paternity, and obtaining child and spousal support . . ."

House bill

Amends present law by adding the following language: "and assuring that assistance in obtaining support will be available under this part to all children (whether or not eligible for aid under part A) for whom such assistance is requested."

Effective date.—On enactment.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

2. REQUIRED STATE PROCEDURES

SECTION 3

Present law

The Federal statute generally does not specify the types of procedures States must use in operating their programs. Sec. 454(13) requires the States to comply with such requirements and standards as the Secretary determines to be necessary to the establishment of an effective program.

House bill

States are required to enact laws establishing the following procedures for use in their IV-D programs.

Senate amendment

Similar to House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement includes the provision that is in both the House bill and the Senate amendment requiring the States to have laws establishing specified child support enforcement procedures for use in their IV-D programs. Under the conference agreement, income withholding procedures must be used in all cases that meet the specifications set forth in this bill. However, the States need not apply certain other procedures in those cases where they determine (taking into account the payment record of the absent parent, the availability of other remedies, and other relevant considerations) that such application would be inappropriate, or would not serve the purpose of the child support program. The procedures with respect to which this State discretion is available are: State tax refund intercept, liens, posting of bond or giving security, and making available information to credit agencies.

With regard to the income withholding procedures, the conferees want to make clear their intent that individuals will not be exempt from withholding because they are employees of the Federal government. The conferees believe that section 459 of the Social Security Act will allow income withholding to be applied to Federal employees. This section provides that moneys (the entitlement to which is based on remuneration for employment) due from or payable by, the United States or the District of Columbia are subject to garnishment to the same extent as if the United States or the District of Columbia were a private person in cases involving enforcement of child support or alimony obligations.

Section 459 was added to the Social Security Act in 1975 as part of the original child support enforcement legislation specifically to assure that individuals who owe child support obligations which are being enforced in accordance with State law cannot evade their obligations simply because the payments being made to them are Federal moneys. The legislative history of this provision reflects the explicit intention of the Congress to override prior decisions by the courts which had held that garnishment or attachment procedures involved the immunity of the United States from suits to which it had not consented.

The conferees reaffirm Congressional intent that individuals should not be exempt from enforcement of child support obligations through attachment or withholding of wages on the basis of their relationship to the Federal government. The conferees note that the current garnishment provisions are written broadly to include (with specific exceptions) all compensation paid or payable for personal services whether the compensation is denominated as wages, salary, commission, bonus pay, severance pay, sick pay, and incentive pay, and extend as well to pensions, retirement or retired pay, annuities, dependent or survivors' benefits, and other similar amounts. In view of the broad interpretation which was clearly intended by the framers of this provision, the conferees believe that there is no merit in the argument that has been raised in at least one State that an individual is immune to wage withholding for the enforcement of child support obligations on the grounds that the private company for which he is working is operating on Federal land.

(A) INCOME WITHHOLDING

1. House bill

In the case of each absent parent against whom a support order is or has been issued or modified in the State, the State must provide for withholding from wage income, in accordance with the conditions described below.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

2. House bill

The amount withheld must be the amount of the current support order, plus amounts for arrearages and for a fee to the employer to cover the cost of withholding. The fee to the employer will be established by the State. The total amount withheld may not exceed the limits provided in sec. 303(b) of the Consumer Credit Protection Act. The limits provided in that law are 50 percent of disposable earnings in the case of an absent parent who has a second family, and 60 percent in the case of an absent parent without a second family. These limits are each increased by 5 percent (to 55 and 65) if there are arrearages with respect to a period prior to the 12-week period which ends with the beginning of the pay period involved. (The Consumer Credit Protection Act defines disposable earnings as that part of the earnings remaining after the deduction of any amounts required by law to be withheld.) The State need not withhold up to the maximum amount permitted in order to satisfy arrearages.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except States are allowed, rather than required, to provide for a fee to cover the cost to the employer of the withholding procedure. Also includes technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

3. House bill

Withholding must begin the earlier of: (1) when the arrearage reaches an amount equal to one month's support payment; or

(2) when an absent parent requests withholding. States may begin withholding at any earlier time.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

4. House bill

Withholding must occur without amendment of the order or further action by the court. Withholding must be initiated without the necessity of any application therefore on behalf of all IV-D (both AFDC and non-AFDC) families. Families not receiving IV-D services may file an application for such services to trigger the initiation of withholding by the administering agency on their behalf.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

5. House bill

Withholding must be carried out in full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State. The State must provide the absent parent with advance notice of withholding and the procedures to be followed if the absent parent wants to contest the action on the grounds that withholding is not proper in the case because of mistakes of fact. If the absent parent contests the withholding, the agency administering the system must determine whether the withholding will actually occur, and must notify the individual of the date on which the withholding is to begin within not more than 30 days after the provision of the advance notice.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that if withholding is contested, the State must notify the non-custodial parent within no more than 45 days whether and when such withholding will occur. If the State determines that withholding will occur, it must furnish the parent with the information that is contained in the notice it sends to the employer requiring that withholding begin. The conference agreement also clarifies that the requirement for advance notice shall not apply in the case of any State that has an income withholding system in effect on the date of enactment if such system provides on such date, and continues to provide, such procedures as may be necessary to meet due process requirements of State law.

6. House bill

The withholding system must be administered by an entity designated by the State (the IV-D agency or other public entity), and provision must be made for expeditious distribution of amounts withheld. The State may provide procedures for the collection and distribution of withheld amounts other than through a public agency or entity, so long as such procedures are publicly accountable, allow prompt distribution, and permit the keeping of records to document the payment of support.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

7. House bill

Employers of individuals subject to withholding, upon receiving proper notice from the State to begin withholding for child support payments (which must be a separate document containing no information other than the amount to be withheld and the amount of the fee to be retained by the employer, or other information necessary for the employer to comply with the withholding order), must be: (1) required to withhold from wages and forward to the appropriate agency (or comply with State approved alternative procedures summarized above) the amount specified in the notice plus a fee paid to the employer (unless any such fee is waived by the employer); (2) allowed to combine all amounts withheld from employees for child support into one check to the appropriate agency, and otherwise simplify the withholding process; (3) held liable to the State (on behalf of the State in AFDC cases and on behalf of the obligee in non-AFDC cases) for any amount they fail to withhold; and (4) subject to a fine if an employee is discharged from employment, refused employment or subjected to disciplinary action because of withholding for child support, even if there are other withholdings for the same employee for other purposes.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except the State is not required to include in the notice to the employer an amount to be withheld by him as a fee to cover the cost of withholding. The amendment also provides that an employer shall not be required to vary the normal pay and disbursement cycles in order to comply with the requirement, and includes technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

8. House bill

Withholding for child support payment must take priority over any legal process under State law against the same wage.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

9. House bill

The State may extend its system of withholding to include withholding from forms of income other than wages.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

10. House bill

The State must make such arrangements and enter into such agreements with other States as may be necessary: (1) to extend its withholding to include withholding from income derived within the State in cases where the support orders were issued in other States, and (2) to encourage the extension of the withholding systems of other States so that such systems will include withholding from income derived in those States in cases where the support orders were issued within the State.

Senate amendment

The State must extend its withholding system so that it will include withholding from income derived within the State in cases where the support orders were issued in other States.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

11. House bill

There must be provision for terminating withholding.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

12. House bill

All child support orders issued or modified in the State after October 1, 1985 must include provision for withholding of wages if arrearages occur. Withholding must be applied under the conditions and procedures established by the State for cases that are not IV-D cases, and in accordance with the requirements and procedures summarized above for IV-D cases.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

13. House bill

For purposes of the income withholding provision, defines "wages" as all cash remuneration for employment, determined without regard to any exclusions from or limitations on such term (or the term "employment") which may be applicable under other provisions of the Social Security Act or under other Federal, State, or local laws.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement gives the States the authority to define wages.

(B) EXPEDITED PROCEDURES

House bill

States must make reasonable efforts to expedite and otherwise improve the establishment of, compliance with, and enforcement of child support obligations and any related obligations arising under or in connection with the support orders involved.

Senate amendment

Requires States to have in effect expedited processes within the State judicial system for establishing paternity and obtaining and enforcing child support orders. Decisions or recommendations resulting from the expedited process must be reviewed (i.e., ratified, modified, or remanded) by judges of the court. In addition, appelate review of child support decisions or actions resulting from the expedited processes would be conducted by the regular court system at the request of either party.

The Secretary would have authority to waive expedited procedures in political subdivisions of States due to variations within States in the effectiveness and timeliness of current processes. Jurisdictions that use administrative processes would qualify for a waiver on the same basis as State or political subdivisions using regular court processes.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement mandates that the States use expedited processes, but allows them to determine whether they are under the judicial system or administrative processes. States are permitted but not required to include paternity establishment in their expedited process. The Secretary may waive the requirement for political subdivisions within a State as provided in the Senate amendment. The managers intend that States shall adopt judicial or administrative changes as needed to expedite the processing of child support actions. It is not intended that the Secretary be authorized to specify the particular administrative or judicial structures to be adopted by the States. Rather, it is intended that the Secretary should measure a State's compliance with this provision primarily on the basis of the results it produces. A State will not be out of compliance if it is achieving appropriate results or is in the process of implementing changes which are reasonably designed to bring about such results.

(C) STATE INCOME TAX REFUND OFFSETS

House bill

Requires States, at the request of the State IV-D agency, to withhold from any tax refund otherwise payable amounts of pastdue support owed by an absent parent for the benefit of an AFDC child, or, at the option of the State, any child who is receiving IV-D services. Provision must be made for withholding for interstate cases.

Senate amendment

Similar to House bill, but also requires the State to withhold amounts owed on behalf of a child who is not receiving AFDC and allows the State to withhold a fee to cover the costs of collecton. The amendment requires notice of the absent parent's home address and social security number to the State agencies that request and enforce the order, and includes technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

2. House bill

Requires notice to the absent parent of the proposed reduction and the procedures to be followed to contest the action. Procedures must be in compliance with due process procedures of the State.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(D) LIENS AGAINST PROPERTY

House bill

Requires States to have procedures for imposing liens against real and personal property for amounts of past-due support owed by a State resident or an individual who owns property in the State.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, but limited to cases where the States find the procedure appropriate. The amendment includes technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment deleting the reference to "appropriate" cases. Discretion not to apply the procedure when the State determines that it is inappropriate is provided in the more general discretionary authority which is included in the conference agreement as described above (under the heading "Required State Procedures").

(E) PATERNITY STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

House bill

State paternity laws must permit the establishment of paternity until a child's 18th birthday.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

(F) SECURITY OR BOND IN CERTAIN CASES

House bill

Requires States to have procedures to require in appropriate cases that an individual give security, post a bond, or give some other type of guarantee to secure support obligations of absent parents who have a pattern of past-due support. There must be notice to the individual of the proposed requirement including the procedures to be followed to contest the action. Procedures must be in compliance with due process procedures of the State.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment deleting the reference to "appropriate cases." Discretion not to apply the procedure when the State determines that it is inappropriate is provided in the more general discretionary authority which is included in the conference agreement as described above (under the heading "Required State Procedures").

(G) PROVIDING INFORMATION ON OVERDUE SUPPORT TO CREDIT AGENCIES

House bill

Requires States to make available to consumer credit bureau organizations, at the request of such agencies, the amount of past-due support owed by absent parents residing in the State. States must make available information on arrearages of $1,000 or more, and may make available information on smaller arrearages. An individual must be notified of the proposed action and given reasonable opportunity to contest the accuracy of the information involved. The notification and procedures for contesting the proposed release of information to credit agencies must be in compliance with the due process procedures in the State. The State may charge a fee to the credit agencies who request and receive this information which cannot exceed the cost to the State of providing the information.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill except for technical differences.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(H) TRACKING AND MONITORING OF SUPPORT PAYMENTS BY PUBLIC AGENCY

House bill

The State must provide that, at the request of either the custodial or absent parent, child support payments must be made through the agency that administers the State's income withholding system regardless of whether there is an arrearage which requires withholding to occur. The State must charge a fee equal to the cost incurred by the State for these services, up to a maximum of $25 a year.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with an amendment making the provision optional with the State.

(I) NOTIFICATION TO AFDC RECIPIENT OF SUPPORT COLLECTED

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

States are required to notify each AFDC recipient, at least once each year, of the amount of child support collected on behalf of that recipient.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(J) DEFINITIONS

House bill

For purposes of the provisions dealing with State income tax refund offsets (c), liens (d), security/bond (f), and information for consumer credit agencies (g), the term "past-due support" is defined as meaning the amount of a delinquency, determined under a court order, or an order of an administrative process established under State law, for support and maintenance of a child, or of a child and the parent with whom the child is living.

Senate amendment

For purposes of the provisions dealing with State income tax refund offsets (c), liens (d), security/bond (f), and information for consumer credit agencies (g), the term "overdue support" is defined as meaning the amount of a delinquency (which has continued for such minimum period of time as established by the Secretary) pursuant to an obligation determined under a court order, or an order of an administrative process established under State law, for support and maintenance of a minor child, which is owed to or on behalf of a minor child. At the option of the State, overdue support may include spousal support (in specified circumstances) and may include amounts which are owed to or on behalf of a child who is not a minor child.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modifications to strike the Secretary's authority to establish the minimum period of time, and to require the collection of spousal support if the State is otherwise required to collect spousal support as provided under sec. 12 of the conference agreement.

(K) EXEMPTION AUTHORITY

House bill

The Secretary may grant an exemption, subject to later review, of the required procedures, if the State can demonstrate that such procedures will not improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the State IV-D program.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill. (Does not apply to provision (I) relating to notice to AFDC recipients.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(L) EFFECTIVE DATE

House bill

October 1, 1985.

Senate amendment

October 1, 1984. If a State agency administering a plan approved under part D of title IV of the Social Security Act demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, that it cannot, by reason of State law, comply with the requirements of a provision mentioned above, the Secretary may prescribe that the provision will become effective beginning with the fourth month beginning after the close of the first session of such State's legislature ending on or after October 1, 1984.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement provides for an effective date of October 1, 1985 and provides that if a State cannot, by reason of State law, comply with the requirement of a provision mentioned above, the Secretary may waive the requirement of such provision until the beginning of the fourth month beginning after the close of the first session of such State's legislature ending on or after October 1, 1985.

3. FEDERAL MATCHING OF ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS

SECTION 4

Present law

The Federal Government pays 70 percent of State and local administrative costs for child support enforcement services to both Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and non-AFDC families, on an open-end entitlement basis.

House bill

Retains present law.

Senate amendment

Reduces the Federal matching rate as follows:

Fiscal year 1987 to 69 percent
Fiscal year 1988 to 68 percent
Fiscal year 1989 to 67 percent
Fiscal year 1990 to 66 percent
Fiscal year 1991 to 65 percent

Conference agreement

The conference agreement provides for Federal matching of administrative costs as follows:

70 percent for fiscal years 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987

68 percent for fiscal years 1988 and 1989

66 percent for fiscal year 1990 and years thereafter.

4. FEDERAL INCENTIVE PAYMENTS

SECTION 5

Present law

A 12 percent incentive payment (financed out of the Federal share of collections) is made to States and localities for collections made on behalf of AFDC families.

1. House bill

Repeals the 12% incentive payment, effective October 1, 1985. Establishes new incentives based on collections on behalf of both AFDC and non-AFDC families. Requires the Secretary to make incentive payments as follows:

The basic incentive payment is equal to 4% of the State's AFDC collections, and 4% of its non-AFDC collections (subject to the cap described below).

To the extent AFDC or non-AFDC collections equal or exceed combined adminstrative costs for both AFDC and non-AFDC, higher incentives will be paid on a sliding scale up to 10% each of non-AFDC and AFDC collections, according to the following cost/collection ratios:

AFDC incentive

Ratio of AFDC collections to combined AFDC/non-AFDC administrative costs:	Incentive equal to this percent of AFDC collections
1.1:1	5.5
1.2:1	6.0
1.3:1	6.5
1.4:1	7.0
1.5:1	7.5
1.6:1	8.0
1.7:1	8.5
1.8:1	9.0
1.9:1	9.5
2.0:1	10.0

Non-AFDC incentive

Ratio of non-AFDC collections to combined AFDC/non-AFDC administrative costs:	Incentive equal to this percent of non-AFDC collections
1.0:1	5.0
1.1:1	5.5
1.2:1	6.0
1.3:1	6.5
1.4:1	7.0
1.5:1	7.5
1.6:1	8.0
1.7:1	8.5
1.8:1	9.0
1.9:1	9.5
2.0:1	10.0

The total dollar amount of the incentive paid for non-AFDC collections is capped at an amount equal to 125% of the State's incentive payment for AFDC collections.

Senate amendment

Repeals the 12% incentive payment, effective October 1, 1985.

Establishes new incentives based on collections on behalf of both AFDC and non-AFDC families. Requires the Secretary to make incentive payments as follows:

The basic incentive is 6% of collections. Above 6%, incentives are paid according to the following cost/collection ratios:

AFDC incentive

Ratio of AFDC collections to combined AFDC/non-AFDC administrative costs:	Incentive equal to this percent of AFDC collections:
1.4:1	6.5
1.6:1	7.0
1.8:1	7.5
2.0:1	8.0
2.2:1	8.5
2.4:1	9.0
2.6:1	9.5
2.8:1	10.0

Non-AFDC incentive

Ratio of AFDC collections to combined AFDC/non-AFDC administrative costs:	Incentive equal to this percent of AFDC collections:
1.4:1	6.5
1.6:1	7.0
1.8:1	7.5
2.0:1	8.0
2.2:1	8.5
2.4:1	9.0
2.6:1	9.5
2.8:1	10.0

The incentive paid for non-AFDC collections is capped at an amount equal to 100% of the incentive for AFDC collections.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that the incentive paid for non-AFDC collections will be capped at an amount equal to 100% of the incentive for AFDC collections in fiscal years 1986 and 1987, 105% in fiscal year 1988, 110% in fiscal year 1989, and 115% in fiscal year 1990 and any fiscal year thereafter. The agreement also provides that for fiscal year 1985, the amount of the AFDC incentive will be calculated on the basis of AFDC collections without regard to the provision added by the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 that requires that the first $50 collected on behalf of an AFDC family in any month must be paid to the family without reducing the amount of the AFDC payment to the family.

2. House bill

At State option, the laboratory costs of determining paternity may be deducted from combined administrative costs for purposes of computing incentive payments.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

3. House bill

Under a pass-through requirement, States must assure that localities which participate in the costs of collecting support will receive an appropriate share of any incentive payments, as determined by the Secretary.

Senate amendment

Requires the States to develop their own criteria for passing through incentives to localities, taking into account efficiency and effectiveness of local programs.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

4. House bill

Incentive funds must be estimated and projected on an annual basis so that States will know in advance what their payments will be.

Amounts collected in interstate cases will be credited, for purposes of computing incentive payments, to both initiating and responding States.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

5. House bill

Effective date.—October 1, 1985. However, for fiscal year 1986 only, States will receive the higher of the amount due them under the new incentive provision or 80 percent of what they would have received under the existing 12 percent incentive program.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1987, a State is eligible to receive the higher of the amount due it under the new incentive and match provisions or 80 percent of what it would have received under the existing 12 percent incentive formula and 70 percent match.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

5. NINETY PERCENT MATCHING FOR AUTOMATED MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS USED IN INCOME WITHHOLDING AND OTHER REQUIRED PROCEDURES

SECTION 6

Present law

Ninety percent Federal matching is available, on an open-end entitlement basis, to States that elect to establish an automatic data processing and information retrieval system designed to assist management in the administration of the State plan, so as to control, account for, and monitor all the factors in the support enforcement collection and paternity determination process. Funds may be used to plan, design, develop, and install or enhance the system. The Secretary must approve the system as meeting specified conditions before matching is available.

House bill

Maintains present law. In addition, specifies that if a State meets the requirements in present law, matching funds may be used for the development and improvement of the income withholding and other procedures required in the bill (described in item 2) through the monitoring of child support payments, the maintenance of accurate records regarding the payment of child support, and the provision of prompt notification to appropriate officials with respect to any arrearages that occur.

Also specifies that the 90 percent matching is available to pay for the acquisition of computer hardware.

Effective date.—First quarter after enactment.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for technical differences and an effective date of October 1, 1984.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

6. FEES FOR SERVICES

SECTION 3

Present law

(a) Application fee

States have the option of charging an application fee for furnishing services to non-AFDC families. The fee must be reasonable, as determined under regulations of the Secretary. Currently the maximum allowable fee is $20 (to be paid by the custodial parent) unless the State has a fee schedule based on each applicant's income. In the latter case, the schedule must be designed so as not to discourage applications by those most in need of services.

(b) Additional costs

In addition, a State may at its option recover costs in excess of the fee. Such recovery may be from either the custodial parent or the absent parent. If a State chooses to make recovery from the custodial parent, it must have in effect a procedure whereby all persons in the State who have authority to order support are informed that such costs are to be collected from the custodial parent.

(c) Late payment fee

No provision.

House bill

(a) Application fee

Retains present law.

(b) Additional costs

Retains present law.

(c) Late payment fee

No provision.

Senate amendment

(a) Application fee

States are required to charge an application fee for non-AFDC cases. The fee may not exceed $25, but, beginning in fiscal year 1986, the Secretary may adjust the maximum allowable fee amount to reflect changes in administrative costs. The State may charge the fee against the custodial parent or pay the fee out of its own funds. The State may also recover the fee from the absent parent. Additionally, the State may vary the amount of the fee to reflect ability to pay. (If the State pays the fee from it's own funds, the payment may not be considered an administrative cost for purposes of federal matching.)

(b) Additional costs

Retains present law.

(c) Late payment fee

States must have in effect a law under which a late payment fee is charged to the absent parents of AFDC and non-AFDC families on support that is overdue. The fee must be a uniform amount established by the State equal to 3 to 10 percent of the overdue support owed for months beginning the month following the enactment of the bill. The State may not take any action which would have the effect, directly or indirectly, of reducing the support paid to the child and may collect the fee only after the full amount of the overdue support has been paid to the child.

Effective date.—October 1, 1984.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with several modifications. States are required to charge an application fee as proposed by the Senate but the managers wish to clarify that the HHS secretary's authority to adjust the fee beginning in FY 86 pertains only to the maximum allowable fee. The conference agreement also establishes a late payment fee that is optional to the States and limits the fee to between 3 and 6 percent. States may provide for these fees to be retained by the jurisdiction making the collection. In such a case, the collecting jurisdiction would be able to utilize the income generated by the fees to cover enforcement costs not otherwise funded by the State. To the extent such costs were met from the fees, they would not be subject to matching.

7. CONTINUATION OF SERVICES FOR FAMILIES THAT LOSE AFDC ELIGIBILITY

SECTION 7

Present law

There is no special provision requiring States automatically to continue support collection activities on behalf of families when they lose eligibility for AFDC.

House bill

States must provide that AFDC recipients whose eligibility for AFDC is terminated due to the receipt of (or an increase in) child support payments or for other reasons will be automatically transferred from AFDC to non-AFDC status under the State IV-D program, without requiring reapplication or the payment of an application fee; and will be provided child support enforcement services on the same basis and under the same conditions as other non-AFDC cases.

Effective.—October 1, 1985.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except for technical differences. The effective date is October 1, 1984.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, but with an amendment providing for the effective date in the Senate amendment.

8. SPECIAL PROJECT GRANTS TO PROMOTE IMPROVEMENTS IN INTERSTATE ENFORCEMENT

SECTION 8

Present law

There is no special provision for funding of interstate enforcement activities.

House bill

Beginning with fiscal year 1985, authorizes an appropriation of $15 million a year to be used by the Secretary to fund special projects developed by States with the objective of using innovative techniques or procedures for, and otherwise improving, child support collections in interstate cases. (Report language makes clear Congressional intent that these special funds should be used by a State to augment and not supplant existing State efforts with respect to interstate cases.)

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except authorizes $5 million for fiscal year 1985, $10 million for fiscal year 1986, and $15 million for fiscal year 1987 and years thereafter. (Senate report includes language similar to that in the House report.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with an amendment authorizing $7 million in fiscal year 1985, $12 million in fiscal year 1986, and $15 million in fiscal year 1987 and years thereafter.

9. PERIODIC REVIEW OF EFFECTIVENESS OF STATE PROGRAMS; MODIFICATION OF PENALTY

SECTION 9

Present law

The Director of the Office of Child Support Enforement is required to conduct an annual audit of each State's child support enforcement program to determine whether it complies with the requirements of the Federal statute. If he finds that the State has failed to have an effective program meeting the specified requirements, the amount of the Federal matching payments to the State under the AFDC program must be reduced by 5 percent. This penalty has never been imposed. Legislation has periodically been enacted to suspend its implementation.

House bill

The present audit and penalty requirements are modified as follows:

The Secretary is required to conduct a review of each State's program at least every 3 years to determine whether the program substantially complies with the requirements of the statute, and to evaluate its effectiveness in carrying out the purposes of the Federal child support law.

If the Secretary finds that a State has not met the requirements of the law, and there has not been corrective action to bring about substantial compliance, the amount of the State's AFDC matching must be reduced by not more than 2 percent, or, if the finding is the second consecutive such finding, not more than 3 percent, or, if the finding is the third or subsequent consecutive such finding, not more than 5 percent. The reduction must continue until the first quarter throughout which the program is found to meet the requirements.

Effective date.—October 1, 1983.

Senate amendment

The present audit and penalty requirements are modified as follows:

The Director of the Federal Office of Child Support Enforcement is required to conduct audits at least every three years to determine whether the standards and requirements prescribed by law and regulation have been met. Under the penalty provision, a State's AFDC matching funds must be reduced by an amount equal to at least 1 but no more than 2 percent for the first failure to comply substantially with the standards and requirements, at least 2 but no more than 3 percent for the second consecutive failure, and at least 3 but not more than 5 percent for the third and any subsequent consecutive failures.

Annual audits would be required unless a State is in substantial compliance. If a State is not in substantial compliance, the penalty may be suspended, but only if the State is actively pursuing a corrective action plan which can be expected to bring the State into substantial compliance on a specific and reasonable timetable. A State which is not in full compliance would be determined to be in substantial compliance only if the Secretary determines that any noncompliance is of a technical nature which does not adversely affect the performance of the child support enforcement program.

Effective date.—October 1, 1983.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with several modifications: (1) audits are to be performed on the basis of substantial compliance as defined in the Senate amendment; (2) the Secretary of HHS is required to approve State corrective action plans designed to achieve substantial compliance; and (3) the Secretary may suspend penalties to allow States to implement approved corrective action plans. If at the end of the corrective action period substantial compliance has been achieved, no penalty would be due. If substantial compliance has not been achieved, penalties would begin at the end of the corrective action period if the State has implemented the corrective action plan.

10. EXTENSION OF SEC. 1115 DEMONSTRATION AUTHORITY TO CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

SECTION 10

Present law

SEC. 1115 of the Social Security Act authorizes the Secretary to grant waivers to States in the operation of their AFDC and medicaid programs, if he determines that the waivers are necessary to enable the States to conduct experimental, pilot, or demonstration projects which are likely to assist in promoting the objective of the programs.

House bill

Expands the sec. 1115 demonstration authority to include the child support enforcement program under the following conditions: (a) the intent of the requested waiver must be to test modifications that will improve the financial well-being of children: (b) a waiver will not be allowed for any modification that would disadvantage children in need of support; and (c) the requested waiver will not result in an increase in Federal AFDC costs.

Effective date.—On enactment.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, except also allows demonstrations that are intended to improve the operation of the program, so long as the conditions described in (b) and (c) of the House bill are met.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees express concern about protecting children who may be affected by these child support demonstration projects. It is the intention of the conferees that any children involved in the demonstrations will not be disadvantaged financially or otherwise.

11. CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT FOR CERTAIN CHILDREN IN FOSTER CARE

SECTION 11

Present law

There is no specific authority in the law for collection of child support on behalf of children who are placed in foster care. This authority was deleted when the foster care program was transferred from the title IV-A to title IV-E.

House bill

Requires state child support agencies to undertake child support collections on behalf of children receiving foster care maintenance payments under title IV-E of the Social Security Act, if an assignment of rights to support to the State has been secured by the foster care agency.

Requires States to take steps, where appropriate, to secure an assignment to the State of any rights to support on behalf of each child receiving foster care maintenance payments under the title IV-E foster care program.

Effective date.—October 1, 1983.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill, but with an effective date on enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, but with an effective date of October 1, 1984.

12. ENFORCEMENT WITH RESPECT TO BOTH CHILD AND SPOUSAL SUPPORT

SECTION 12

Present law

At the option of the State, child support enforcement services may include the enforcement of spousal support, but only if a support obligation has been established with respect to the spouse, and the child and spouse are living in the same household.

House bill

Collection by the State of spousal support under the specified circumstances is required, rather than allowed.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with an amendment clarifying that the provisions in current law and the House bill apply only where child support is being collected along with spousal support.

13. MODIFICATIONS IN CONTENT OF SECRETARY'S ANNUAL REPORT

SECTION 13

Present law

Within 3 months after the close of each fiscal year, the Secretary must submit an annual report to the Congress on child support program activities. The statute specifies certain data which must be included in the report.

House bill

The information required to be included in the annual report is modified to include the following information by State:

(1) the number of AFDC and non-AFDC cases in which there are preexisting or newly established support obligations, the amount of those obligations, the number of such cases with collections and the amount collected;

(2) the number of cases with support obligations in which 33-66 percent under 33 percent and 0 percent was paid; and

(3) data regarding interstate collection.

Effective for reports due beginning with fiscal year 1987.

Senate amendment

Modifies the present reporting requirements to require the following information by State:

(1) the total number of cases in which a support obligation has been established in the past year and the total amount of such obligations for these cases;

(2) the total number of cases in which a support obligation has been established and the total amount of such obligations for these cases;

(3) those cases described in (1) in which support was collected during such fiscal year and the total amount of such collections; and

(4) those cases described in (2) in which support was collected during such fiscal year and the total amount of such collections.

Additionally, the annual report must include information on the child support cases filed and the collections made in each State on behalf of children residing in another State or cases against parents residing in another State.

Finally, the annual report must detail how much in administrative costs is spent in each functional category (including paternity) of expenditures. The information is to be separately stated for current and for past AFDC cases and non-AFDC cases.

Effective for reports due beginning with fiscal year 1986.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

14. REQUIREMENT TO PUBLICIZE THE AVAILABILITY OF CHILD SUPPORT SERVICES

SECTION 14

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States must frequently publicize, through public service announcements and other means, the availability of child support enforcement services, together with information as to the application fee for such services, if any, and a telephone number or postal address to be used to obtain additional information.

Effective date.—October 1, 1985.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with an agreement limiting the requirement to public service announcements. The announcement may be made using radio, television, newspapers, or such other media as the State determine appropriate.

15. STATE COMMISSIONS ON CHILD SUPPORT

SECTION 15

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Governor of each State is required to appoint a State Commission on Child Support. The Commission must include representation from all aspects of the child support system including custodial and non-custodial parents, the IV-D agency, the judiciary, the governor, the legislature, child welfare and social services agencies, and others.

Each State commission is to examine the functioning of the State child support system with regard to securing support and parental involvement for both AFDC and non-AFDC children, including but not limited to such specific problems as: (1) visitation; (2) establishment of appropriate objective standards for support; (3) enforcement of interstate obligations; and (4) additional Federal and State legislation needed to obtain support for all children.

The commissions shall submit to the Governor and make available to the public, reports on their findings and recommendations no later than October 1, 1985.

Costs of operating the commissions will be eligible for Federal matching only in the case of costs for transportation within the State and such other costs as are specifically allowed by the Secretary in regulations.

The Secretary may waive the requirement for a commission at the request of a State if he determines that the State has in place objective standards for child support obligations, has had a commission or council within the last five years, or is making satisfactory progress toward fully effective child support enforcement.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with an amendment eliminating Federal matching for costs.

16. REQUIREMENT TO INCLUDE MEDICAL SUPPORT AS PART OF ANY CHILD SUPPORT ORDER

SECTION 16

Present law

There is no provision in the child support statute that requires State agencies to undertake efforts to include medical support as part of any child support order. On August 4, 1983 the Secretary issued a notice of proposed rule-making proposing to require IV-D agencies to petition to include medical support orders in situations in which coverage is available to the absent parent at reasonable cost.

House bill

The Secretary of Health and Human Services is required to issue regulations to require State agencies to petition to include medical support as part of any child support order whenever health care coverage is available to the absent parent at a reasonable cost. The regulations must also provide for improved information exchange between the State IV-D agencies and the medicaid agencies with respect to the availability of health insurance coverage.

Effective date.—On enactment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill. The conferees wish to point out that while they have approved a four-month Medicaid extension, as discussed later in this report, the conferees believe the best long run solution to achieving medical insurance coverage for all families is the use of private medical insurance which is or can be made available through a parent's employer.

The conferees direct the Secretary of HHS to examine additional administrative, regulatory and legislative possibilities to fully and vigorously use this private coverage, and report to the Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee by January 1, 1986 on actions taken.

17. INCREASED AVAILABILITY OF FEDERAL PARENT LOCATOR SERVICE TO STATE AGENCIES

SECTION 17

Present law

The Federal statute requires operation by the Federal Government of a Parent Locator Service (PLS) to assist States in locating absent parents. States may use the Federal PLS only after there has been a determination that the absent parent cannot be located through procedures under the control of the State child support agency.

House bill

Repeals the requirement that the States, in effect, exhaust all State child support locator resources before they may request the assistance of the Federal PLS.

Effective date.—On enactment.

Senate amendment

Same as House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

18. GUIDELINES FOR CHILD SUPPORT AWARDS

SECTION 18

Present law

The IV-D statute includes no requirement that States establish guidelines to be considered in determining support orders.

House bill

No provision. (See item on State Commissions.)

Senate amendment

Requires each State to establish guidelines for child support awards within the State. The guidelines may be established by law or by judicial or administrative action. They must be made available to all judges and others who have the power to determine child support awards, but need not be binding upon them. The Secretary must provide technical assistance to the States in establishing the guidelines.

Effective date.—October 1, 1986.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a modification making the provision effective October 1, 1987. Although the provision does not require that guidelines for support awards be established before October 1, 1987, States are encouraged to begin their consideration of appropriate guidelines as soon as possible.

19. AVAILABILITY OF SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS

SECTION 19

Present law

Child support agencies have access to certain types of information through the Federal Parent Locator Service and the Internal Revenue Service. The Secretary of HHS, through the Parent Locator Service, is authorized to furnish the agencies with the most recent address and place of employment of absent parents. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to release certain wage, income tax, and return information to Federal, State and local child support enforcement agencies if needed by such agencies for purposes of the child support enforcement program. Neither Secretary is authorized to release the absent parent's social security number.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides for the disclosure of the absent parent's social security number to child support agencies both through the Parent Locator Service and by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

20. EXTENSION OF MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY WHEN SUPPORT COLLECTION RESULTS IN TERMINATION OF AFDC ELIGIBILITY

SECTION 20

Present Law

When a family loses eligibility for AFDC as a result of child support collections, it also loses categorical eligibility for medicaid.

House bill

If a family loses AFDC eligibility as the result (wholly or partly) of increased collection of support payments under the IV-D program, the State must continue to provide medicaid benefits for 4 calendar months beginning with the month of ineligibility.

(The family must have received AFDC in at least three of the six months immediately preceding the month of ineligibility.)

Effective date.—On enactment.

Senate amendment

Retains present law.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, but with an amendment limiting the application of the provision to families becoming ineligible for AFDC before October 1, 1988.

21. COLLECTION OF PAST-DUE SUPPORT FROM FEDERAL TAX REFUNDS

SECTION 21

Present law

Upon receiving notice from a state child support agency that an individual owes past-due support which has been assigned to the State as a condition of AFDC eligibility, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to withhold from any tax refunds due that individual an amount equal to any past-due support. The withheld amount is sent to the State agency, together with notice of the taxpayer's current address. The Secretary of the Treasury is required to issue regulations, approved by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, prescribing the timing and content of notices by the States. States are required to reimburse the Federal Government for the cost of the procedure.

The amount currently being charged the States for each case that is being offset is $11.00. This will be reduced to $3.20 for cases processed in 1985.

"Past-due support" is defined as the amount of a delinquency determined under court order or order of an administrative process established under State law for support and maintenance of a child or a child and the parent with whom the child is living.

Under present procedures, the State agency, or, at the option of the State, the Federal Office of Child Support Enforcement, must give an individual prior notice that the offset will occur, and the individual may contest the action with the State agency. In addition, the Internal Revenue Service must provide the taxpayer with a notice, concurrent with the offset, of the amount of the offset and of the State to which it has been paid.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Extends the present system for withholding past-due support from Federal tax refunds to absent parents of non-AFDC minor children, as follows:

State child support agencies will be required to submit to the IRS for withholding, the names of absent parents who owe past-due support to whom the withholding procedures may be applied. These must be limited to cases where there are arrearages of $500 or more, and which, on the basis of current payment patterns and the enforcement efforts that have been made, the State agency determines are unlikely to be paid before the offset occurs. In addition, States may limit arrearages which they submit to the IRS to amounts that have accrued since the State undertook to collect support for the non-AFDC family.

Once a State agency has determined that the name of an absent parent will be submitted to the IRS, it must send notice to that absent parent of the proposed offset, including the procedures to be followed in contesting the proposed offset. The notice must also inform the absent parent and spouse, if any, of the procedures which may be taken to protect the unobligated spouse's portion of the refund.

If, on the basis of the information provided by the State child support agency (through the Department of Health and Human Services), the IRS determines that an income tax refund must be withheld to pay past-due support, the IRS must provide the taxpayer with notice, concurrent with offset, of the amount of the offset and of the State to which it has been paid so that any questions which the taxpayer may have about the child support obligation may be addressed to the appropriate State child support agency. The IRS notice must also inform the taxpayer that, in the case of a joint return where both spouses had income the spouse who is not liable for the past-due obligation may file an amended tax form to recover the unobligated spouse' portion of the amount that was withheld. If the unobligated spouse subsequently files an amended return to secure his or her proper share of a refund, the IRS must pay that share to the individual.

Amounts of refunds withheld by the IRS will be sent to the State child support agency that submitted the name for offset, so that they can in turn be paid to the family that is owed the past-due support. It is expected that generally the State agency will make prompt payment to the families involved. However, if the IRS informs the State agency that the absent parent has filed a joint return, and therefore the possibility exists that the unobligated spouse may file an amended return to claim his or her share of the return, the State agency will be authorized to delay payment to the family that owed past-due support for a period of up to six months, or (if earlier) until the unobligated spouse has been paid the proper share of the refund.

The IRS may charge the State a fee of up to $25 for processing each non-AFDC case submitted. The State may in turn require that a fee of up to $25 be paid by the family requesting offset. This user fee is intended to defray costs incurred by the IRS and the State in processing the non-AFDC cases and in meeting the notice requirements.

Effective date.—Effective for refunds payable after December 31, 1985.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, but limits the provision to apply to refunds payable after December 31, 1985 and before January 1, 1991.

22. WISCONSIN CHILD SUPPORT INITIATIVE

SECTION 22

Present law

Although the Social Security Act allows the Secretary to waive certain requirements of the AFDC program for purposes of demonstration programs, there may not be authority broad enough to allow a State to restructure substantially its AFDC and child support programs.

The State of Wisconsin is planning to undertake a major experiment which involves both its child support enforcement and AFDC programs.

House bill

Requires the Secretary of HHS to approve requests from the State of Wisconsin for waivers of Federal IV-D (CSE) and IV-A (AFDC) requirements that will allow the State to continue to receive Federal CSE and AFDC matching funds while testing modifications in both programs contained in its "Child Support Initiative," if the requested waivers meet the conditions summarized below.

The purposes of the requested waiver authority should be: (a) to improve the financial well-being of children; (b) to obtain flexibility in the manner and procedures to be used in providing IV-D CSE assistance to single parent households in gaining adequate child support, including the provision of IV-D services whether or not a family formally applies for such services; (c) to permit the State to test alternative IV-D and AFDC procedures in different sub-state areas without being out of compliance with "Statewideness" requirements; (d) to permit the State to establish alternative arrangements for the payment of child support in order to reinforce parental responsibility for the child; and (e) to permit the State to use Federal AFDC matching funds to insure that there is an adequate level of support when the contribution of the absent parent, by itself, is inadequate (including the provision of such support to non-AFDC families without requiring them to reduce income and assets to the prevailing AFDC eligibility level).

The alternative IV-D CSE and AFDC procedures or modifications allowed under the requested waivers must not disadvantage children in need of child support or make children in the State worse off financially than they would be without the modifications in the State AFDC and IV-D programs. The State may receive no more Federal AFDC funds than it would without the modifications.

Effective date.—October 1, 1983.

Senate amendment

As under the House bill, requires the Secretary of HHS to waive requirements of the AFDC and child support programs for the State of Wisconsin under specified conditions. The State may test its initiative in any county or counties, or throughout the State.

To qualify for waiver, the State must provide a complete description of the program which it will operate in place of the AFDC and child support programs, and make the description readily available to the public throughout the State. The Governor must provide assurances that, under the initiative, assistance will be provided to all children in need of financial support, and the State will continue to operate an effective child support enforcement program.

In addition, the State must agree that, during the period of the test, it will continue to determine eligibility for medical assistance under the State plan approved under title XIX of the Social Security Act, applying the criteria (insofar as may be applicable to members of families with dependent children affected by the initiative) in effect under its AFDC State plan approved for the month preceding the month in which the initiative becomes effective, except that the criteria shall be considered to have been changed to the extent necessary to comply with future changes in Federal law or regulations.

The State must specify measurable performance objectives, submit an evaluation plan, and agree to submit interim and final evaluations and reports, as the Secretary may require. In addition, the State must agree to obtain, at least once every two years, a financial and compliance audit of the funds it receives under this provision, and to obtain, after the initiative is ended, a final audit which must be made public.

The State's proposal must describe in detail how the initiative will affect children and families, with specific reference to the principles for calculating benefits and establishing and enforcing child support obligations. The description must also include estimates of cost and program effects and provide other relevant information necessary for the Secretary to determine whether the financial well-being of children and their families will be adversely affected by the initiative.

In general, the Federal payment which Wisconsin will be eligible to receive to operate its initiative will be equal to the State's proportionate share of the amount paid to all States for: (1) AFDC benefit costs; (2) AFDC administrative costs; (3) child support administrative costs; and (4) child support incentive payments.

The State's proportionate share of each amount listed above shall be the portion of each amount that bears the same ratio to such amount as the corresponding amount advanced to the State for quarters in fiscal years 1984 through 1986 bears to the total corresponding amount advanced to all other States for such quarters.

The initative proposed by the State and the related requested waivers will become effective within 120 days after submission unless the Secretary determines that the financial well-being of children in the State will be adversely affected by the initiative. The Secretary must notify the State that, effective with the beginning of the following quarter (or later at the option of the State) the State may operate its initiative instead of its AFDC or child support programs in the areas designated by the State.

The State may cease the initiative and return to the administrative of the regular AFDC and child support programs upon provision to the Secretary of at least 3 months notice. The Secretary may terminate approval of the initiative upon the giving of 3 months advance notice to the State if it is determined that the financial well-being of children in the areas where the initiative is in effect would be better achieved by operating the regular AFDC and child support programs.

Effective date.—For quarters beginning after September 30, 1986, and ending before October 1, 1994.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

23. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS LANGUAGE

SECTION 23

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Incorporates Senate Concurrent Resolution 84, which makes certain findings with respect to child support enforcement, and sets forth as the sense of the Congress that—

(1) State and local governments must focus on the vital issues of child support, child custody, visitation rights, and other related domestic issues that are properly within the jurisdictions of such governments;

(2) all individuals involved in the domestic relations process should recognize the seriousness of these matters to the health and welfare of our nation's children and assign them the highest priority; and

(3) mutual recognition of the needs of all parties involved in divorce actions will greatly enhance the health and welfare of America's children and families.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

24. LIMITATION ON DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY OF CHILD SUPPORT OBLIGATIONS

SECTION 24

Present law

In general, the Bankruptcy Act does not allow discharge in bankruptcy from any debt to a spouse, former spouse, or child of the debtor, for alimony to, maintenance for, or support of such spouse or child, if it is in connection with a separation, divorce decree, or property settlement agreement. However, support obligations that are assigned generally may be discharged, unless they are assigned to the State in connection with the collection of support by the IV-D agency on behalf of an AFDC recipient. In addition, a support obligation arising from a paternity determination is usually not protected from discharge in bankruptcy because it does not meet the requirement that it be in connection with a separation, divorce decree, or property settlement agreement.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends the Bankruptcy Act to provide that obligations that have been assigned to the State as part of the IV-D enforcement process may not be discharged in bankruptcy, regardless of whether they are on behalf of an AFDC family or non-AFDC family. In addition, the amendment provides protection against discharge in cases where support is established on the basis of a paternity determination.

MAKING IN ORDER ON TOMORROW OR ANY DAY THEREAFTER CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4325, CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order, on Thursday, August 2, 1984, or any day thereafter, any rule of the House notwithstanding, to consider the conference report on the bill (H.R. 4325) to amend part D of title IV of the Social Security Act to assure, through mandatory income withholding, incentive payments to States, and other improvements in the child support enforcement program, that all children in the United States who are in need of assistance in securing financial support from their parents will receive such assistance regardless of their circumstances, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to state for my colleagues that this conference report has been worked out to the satisfaction, I believe, of all the conferees. I know of no objection to it on this side.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 5798, TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1985

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5798) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the United States Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain Independent Agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs. ROYBAL, ADDABBO, AKAKA, HOYER, BOLAND, LONG of Maryland, WHITTEN, MILLER of Ohio, RUDD, ROGERS, and CONTE.

There was no objection.

HUNGER RELIEF ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 517 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 5151.

□ 1655

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5151) to alleviate hunger in the United States by strengthening Federal nutrition programs, with Mr. TORRES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Friday, July 27, 1984, all time for general debate had expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now printed in the reported bill shall be considered by titles as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each title shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Hunger Relief Act of 1984".

□ 1700

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, basically what I would like to do is to set the stage on the bill that is before the House. It is H.R. 5151, which is a bipartisan effort to try to address the serious problem of hunger in our society.

There are several key points that I would like to reiterate to the Members.

First of all, this is a bipartisan effort by the minority Members of the Agriculture Committee, particularly the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON], who is the ranking Republican Member on the subcommittee, and myself, along with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], the chairman of the full committee. It does represent assistance, urgent assistance in the hunger area that has been identified as needed not only by our subcommittee, but by the mayors, by the Government Accounting Office, by the Governors, and particularly by the President's task force on food assistance.

It recognizes that we do have a crisis with regard to hunger, both in terms of the need that we have seen in city after city and in rural areas in this country and also in terms of the implications of not dealing with that in terms of health care impacts as well as educational impacts.

This bill is within the budget resolution. The gentleman from Missouri and myself made a special effort to ensure that any bill we brought here was a bill that fell within the bounds of the budget resolution as adopted by the House.

There are four key areas that are addressed by this bill: First, to try to increase work incentives; second, to increase the adequacy and accountability of benefits that are provided through the food stamp program; third, to improve nutrition education and surveillance in our society; and fourth, to improve the administration and the accountability of this program.

As I mentioned in the general debate, there has been a great deal of talk and concern about the issue of hunger in our society. The time for that, it seems to me, is over. The time has come to try to do something to deal with this problem.

H.R. 5151 represents that kind of effort.

If I might say to my colleagues in the House that what we might anticipate are roughly five amendments, one by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON], one by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN], who is on the subcommittee, and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

We believe at this point that we can expedite the process on amendments. We anticipate there may be some rollcalls on some of those amendments, but we are hoping to expedite this bill as much as possible this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate title I.

The text of title I is as follows:

TITLE I—FOOD STAMP AND RELATED PROVISIONS

ELIGIBILITY OF THE HOMELESS

SEC. 101. (a) The first sentence of section 3(i) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2012(i)) is amended by—

(1) in clause (1), after "consumption", inserting "(or in the case of an individual who does not reside in a permanent dwelling or who has no fixed address, for such individual's consumption)"; and

(2) in clause (2), after "consumption" each time that it appears, inserting "(or in the case of individuals who do not reside in permanent dwellings or who have no fixed addresses, for such individuals' consumption)".

(b) Section 11(e)(2) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2020(e)(2)) is amended by—

(1) striking out the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting a period in lieu thereof; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following: "The State agency shall provide a method of certifying and issuing coupons to eligible households who do not reside in permanent dwellings or who have no fixed addresses, and shall take steps to assure that such method limits participation in the food stamp program to eligible households.".

ADJUSTMENT OF COST OF THRIFTY FOOD PLAN; DEFINITION OF THE DISABLED

SEC. 102. (a) Section 3 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2012) is amended by—

(1) in subsection (o)—

(A) in clause (7), striking out "and October 1, 1984," and "and" at the end thereof; and

(B) striking out clause (8) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new clauses:

"(8) on October 1, 1984, adjust the cost of such diet to reflect changes in the cost of the thrifty food plan for the twelve months ending June 30, 1984, and round the result to the nearest lower dollar increment for each household size, (9) on October 1, 1985, adjust the cost of such diet to reflect changes in the cost of the thrifty food plan for the twelve months ending June 30, 1985, increase the cost of such diet by one per centum, and round the result to the nearest lower dollar increment for each household size, and (10) on October 1, 1986, and each October 1 thereafter, adjust the cost of such diet to reflect changes in the cost of the thrifty food plan for the twelve months ending the preceding June 30, and round the result to the nearest lower dollar increment for each household size."; and

(2) in subsection (r)—

(A) amending clause (2) by inserting, before the semicolon at the end thereof, ", federally or State administered supplemental benefits of the type described in section 1616(a) of the Social Security Act if the Secretary determines that such benefits are conditioned on meeting the disability or blindness criteria used under title XVI of the Social Security Act, or federally or State administered supplemental benefits of the type described in section 212(a) of Public Law 93-66 (42 U.S.C. 1382 note)";

(B) amending clause (4)(A) by, after "service-connected", inserting "or non-service-connected";

(C) amending clause (5)(B) by striking out "or" at the end thereof;

(D) striking out the period at the end of clause (6) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(E) adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(7) is an individual receiving an annuity under section 2(a)(1)(iv) or 2(a)(1)(v) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1974 (45 U.S.C. 231a(a)(1)(iv) or 231a(a)(1)(v)), if his service as an employee under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1974, after December 31, 1936, had been included in the term 'employment' as defined in the Social Security Act, and if an application for disability benefits had been filed."

(b) It is the sense of Congress that the basis for benefit levels of the food stamp program should be reviewed. The Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate are encouraged to provide for such a review, which should be completed by April 1, 1986.

CATEGORICAL ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 103. (a) Section 5 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2014) is amended by—

(1) inserting after the first sentence of subsection (a) the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, except the provisions of section 6 (b) and (g) and the third sentence of section 3(i), households in which each member receives either benefits under a State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, supplemental security income benefits under title XVI of the Social Security Act, or aid to the aged, blind, or disabled under titles I, X, or XIV of the Social Security Act, shall be eligible to participate in the food stamp program."; and

(2) striking out subsection (j).

(b) Section 11(i) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2020(i)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No household shall have its application to participate in the food stamp program denied or its benefits under the food stamp program terminated solely on the basis that its application to participate has been denied or its benefits have been terminated under any of the programs carried out under the statutes specified in the second sentence of section 5(a) of this Act and without a separate determination by the State agency that the household fails to satisfy the eligibility requirements for participation in the food stamp program specified in this Act.".

EXCLUDED INCOME

SEC. 104. The first sentence of section 5(d) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2014(d)) is amended by adding at the end of clause (3) the following, "and to the extent loans include any origination fees and insurance premiums,".

(1) in the third sentence, striking out "18" and inserting in lieu thereof "20";

(2) in the fourth sentence—

(A) amending the proviso to clause (2) to read as follows: ": Provided, That the amount of such excess shelter expense deduction shall not exceed $155 a month in the forty-eight contiguous States and the District of Columbia, and shall not exceed, in Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States, $260, $215, $180, and $110 a month, respectively, adjusted on October 1, 1985, and on each October 1 thereafter to the nearest lower dollar increment to reflect changes in the shelter (exclusive of homeownership costs), fuel, and utilities components of housing costs in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as appropriately adjusted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics after consultation with the Secretary, for the twelve months ending the preceding June 30,"; and

(B) amending clause (3) to read as follows:

"(3) a deduction combining the dependent care and excess shelter expense deductions under clauses (1) and (2), the maximum allowable level of which shall not exceed the maximum allowable deduction under clause (2).".

(b) The provisions of subsection (a)(1) shall be implemented on April 1, 1985.

MONTHLY REPORTING AND RETROSPECTIVE ACCOUNTING—STATE OPTION

SEC. 106. (a) Section 5(f)(2) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2014(f)(2)) is amended by—

(1) in subparagraph (A), after "households" inserting ", and for all applicant households upon application,";

(2) amending subparagraph (B) to read as follows:

"(B) Household income for all other households shall be calculated either on a prospective basis as provided in paragraph (3)(A) or on a retrospective basis as provided in paragraph (3)(B), as elected by the State agency."; and

(3) striking out subparagraph (C).

(b) Section 6(c)(1) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2015(c)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) State agencies, whether they elect to use a system of prospective accounting or a system of retrospective accounting in accordance with section 5(f)(2) of this Act, may (A) require certain categories of households, including households with earned income (except migrant farmworker households), households with potential earners, including individuals receiving unemployment compensation benefits and individuals required by section 6(d) of this Act to register for work, and households required to file a similar report under title IV-A of the Social Security Act, but not including households that have no earned income and in which all adult members are elderly or disabled members, to file monthly reports of household circumstances in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, or (B) require certain categories of households to report at specified less frequent intervals. The Secretary may permit State agencies to accept, as satisfying the requirement that households report at such specified less frequent intervals, (A) recertifications conducted in accordance with section 11(e)(4) of this Act, (B) in person interviews conducted during a certification period, (C) written reports filed by households, or (D) such other documentation or actions as the Secretary may prescribe. Each household that is not required to file monthly reports shall be required to report or cause to be reported to the State agency changes in income or household circumstances which the Secretary deems necessary in order to assure accurate eligibility and benefit determinations.".

RESOURCES LIMITATION

SEC. 107. (a) Section 5(g) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2014(g)) is amended by—

(1) in the first sentence, striking out "$1,500" and "$3,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,250" and "$3,500", respectively; and

(2) in the second sentence—

(A) after "physically disabled household member" inserting "and any other property, real or personal, to the extent that it is directly related to the maintenance or use of such vehicle"; and

(B) striking out "$4,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,500".

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be implemented on April 1, 1985.

STAGGERING OF COUPON ISSUANCE

SEC. 108. Section 7 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2016) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) The State agency may implement a procedure for staggering the issuance of coupons to eligible households throughout the entire month: Provided, That the procedure assures that, in the transition period from other issuance procedures, no eligible household experiences an interval between coupon issuances of more than thirty-five days, either through regular issuances by the State agency or through supplemental issuances.".

DISASTER TASK FORCE; OFFICE HOURS; TAX INFORMATION

SEC. 109. (a) Section 5(h)(2) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2015(h)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) The Secretary shall (i) establish a Food Stamp Disaster Task Force to assist States in implementing and operating the disaster program and the regular food stamp program in the disaster area, and (ii) send members of such task force to the disaster area as soon as possible after the disaster occurs to provide direct assistance to State and local officials.".

(b) Section 11 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2020) is amended by—

(1) in subsection (e)(2), as amended by section 101, adding at the end thereof the following: "The State agency shall assess, from time to time, the need for operating food stamp offices within the State during evening and weekend hours;"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(o)(1) Each State agency shall request and use any information available from the Secretary of the Treasury under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to return information with respect to unearned income for purposes of income and eligibility verification in accordance with paragraph (2), and target such information to those uses which are most likely to be productive in identifying and preventing ineligibility and incorrect participation.

"(2) In order to protect households applying for or participating in the food stamp program from the improper usage of information obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to disclosure of return information with respect to unearned income to Federal, State, and local agencies administering certain programs), no State agency receiving such information shall take any action based thereon to reduce, suspend, terminate, or deny program benefits to the household involved until such agency has taken steps to independently verify the information. Such verification shall include (1) verification of the exact amount of the asset or income involved, (2) an evaluation of whether the household actually has access to such asset or income for its own use, and (3) a determination regarding the period or periods when the household actually had such asset or income.".

JOB SEARCH PROGRAM

SEC. 110. (a) Section 6(d) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2015(d)) is amended by—

(1) amending paragraph (1)(ii) to read as follows:

"(ii) refuses without good cause to fulfill the job search requirements prescribed by paragraph (4) and whatever reasonable job search requirements are prescribed by the State agency in accordance with paragraph (4), which may, at the option of the State agency, provide that such requirements apply to program applicants at the time of application: Provided, That the period of ineligibility shall be two months;";

(2) adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following new sentences: "Any period of ineligibility for violations under this paragraph shall end when the household member who committed the violation complies with the requirement that has been violated. If the household member who committed the violation leaves the household during the period of ineligibility, such household shall no longer be subject to sanction for such violation and, if it is otherwise eligible, may resume participation in the program, but any other household of which such person thereafter becomes a member shall be ineligible for the balance of the period of ineligibility."; and

(3) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) Each State agency shall implement a job search program. For purposes of this Act, a "job search program" means a program that contains terms and conditions comparable to those prescribed in section 402(a)(35)(A) (i) and (ii) of part A of title IV of the Social Security Act and, except that a State agency shall have no obligation to incur costs exceeding $25 per participant per month, in section 402(a)(35)(B) of part A of title IV of such Act for job search activities under the Aid to Families With Dependent Children program (except that the State agency shall retain the option provided in paragraph (1)(ii) relating to applying the program requirements to applicants). A "job search program" may also include, to the extent determined appropriate by the State agency, reasonable job search training and support activities that may consist of jobs skills assessments, job finding clubs, training in techniques for employability, job placement services, or other direct training or support activities determined by the State agency to expand the job search abilities or employability of those subject to the program. The State agency may provide that participation in such training or support activities may supplement or supplant other requirements imposed on those subject to the program.

"(B) Each State agency shall exempt from job search requirements under paragraph (1) categories of household members to which the State agency determines that the application of such requirements is impracticable as applied to such categories due to factors such as, but not limited to, the availability of work opportunities and the cost effectiveness of job search activities. In making such a determination, the State agency may designate a category consisting of all such household members residing in specified area(s) of the State. The State agency shall also exempt or suspend from such requirements individual household members not included in any such category but with respect to whom it determines that such requirements are impracticable because of personal circumstances such as, but not limited to, lack of job readiness and employability, the remote location of work opportunities, and unavailability of dependent care.".

(b) Section 11(e) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2020(e)) is amended by—

(1) striking out the period after paragraph (21) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(22) the manner in which the State agency will carry out the job search program under section 6(d)(4) of this Act.".

(c) Section 16 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2025) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) Effective October 1, 1984, the Secretary shall allocate in each fiscal year, from funds appropriated for such fiscal year under section 18(a)(1) of this Act, the amount of $50,000,000, which amount shall be used to pay to each State agency the full cost (except as otherwise provided in this subsection) of carrying out the job search program under section 6(d)(4) of this Act.

"(2) If, in carrying out such activities, a State agency incurs costs that exceed the amount payable to the State agency under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall pay such State agency an amount equal to 50 per centum of such additional costs in accordance with subsection (a).

"(3) The Secretary shall, in accordance with subsection (a), reimburse each State agency in an amount equal to 50 per centum of the total amount of payments made or costs incurred by the State agency in connection with transportation costs and other expenses reasonably incurred by participants in the job search program, except that such total amount shall not exceed an amount representing $25 per participant per month.

"(4) The Secretary shall monitor the job search programs carried out by State agencies under this Act to measure their effectiveness in terms of the increase in the numbers of household members who obtain employment and the numbers of such members who retain such employment as a result of their participation in the program. The Secretary shall, not later than April 1, 1987, report to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate on the effectiveness of such job search programs.".

PILOT PROJECT FOR RURAL AREAS OF ALASKA

SEC. 111. Section 17 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2026) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g)(1)(A)(i) During the period from October 1, 1985, through September 30, 1989, from the sums appropriated under this Act the Secretary shall, subject to the provisions of this paragraph and paragraph (2), pay to the State of Alaska.

"(1) for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, an amount equal to the amount that would have been expended by the Secretary to carry out the food stamp program in the rural areas of Alaska during such fiscal year, including the value of coupon allotments and State administrative expenses, as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the State of Alaska, as such amount may be adjusted under the following sentence, and

"(2) for each fiscal year thereafter through the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, the amount paid for the preceding fiscal year adjusted to reflect food price changes in the rural areas of Alaska for the fiscal year for which the determination is being made, as projected by the Secretary on the basis of the best data available, as such amount may be further adjusted under the following sentence, to finance 100 per centum of the State's expenditures for providing non-cash food assistance to needy persons in the rural areas of Alaska and 50 per centum of the State's administrative expenses related to the provision of such assistance. The amounts determined under clauses (1) and (2) of the preceding sentence shall be adjusted by the Secretary from time to time, but not less often than annually, to reflect any changes in the number of needy persons in the rural areas of Alaska requiring food assistance under the plan approved by the Secretary under paragraph (2)(A), as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the State of Alaska. The State of Alaska may at reasonable intervals, but not more frequently than twice in any fiscal year, propose to the Secretary adjustments under the preceding sentence, which proposal shall promptly be acted upon by the Secretary in consultation with the State. For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'rural areas of Alaska' means all areas of the State of Alaska other than areas within the municipality of Anchorage, Matanuska-Susitna Borough, Fairbanks Northstar Borough, Kenai Peninsula Borough, city/borough of Juneau, city/borough of Sitka, Ketchikan Gateway Borough, city of Valdez, Fort Greely, Fort Richardson, Fort Wainwright, Eielson Air Force Base, and Elmendorf Air Force Base.

"(ii) The payments to the State for any fiscal year shall not exceed the expenditures by the State during that year for the provision of the assistance the provision of which is included in the plan of the State approved under paragraph (2) and 50 per centum of the related administrative expenses, except as otherwise provided in the following subparagraph (B).

"(B) The Secretary shall, subject to the provisions of paragraph (2), pay in advance to the State for the applicable fiscal year, at such times and in such manner as the Secretary may determine, the amount estimated by the State pursuant to paragraph (2)(A)(i)(IV), reduced or increased to the extent of any prior overpayment or current underpayment which the Secretary determines has been made under this subsection and with respect to which adjustment has not already been made under this paragraph, except that the State may carry over, for use during the first succeeding quarter of any fiscal year, up to 5 per centum of the amount paid to it by the Secretary under this subsection for the preceding fiscal year.

"(2)(A)(i) In order to receive payments under this subsection, the State shall have a plan for operation of the program for providing noncash food assistance to needy persons in the rural areas of Alaska approved by the Secretary under this subsection. By June 1, 1985, the State shall submit to the Secretary an initial plan for the provision of such assistance that—

"(I) designates a single agency of the State that shall be responsible for the administration, or supervision of the administration, of the program for the provision of such assistance;

"(II) assesses the food assistance needs of needy persons residing in the rural areas of Alaska;

"(III) describes the program for the provision of such assistance, including the noncash assistance to be provided and the persons to whom such assistance will be provided, and any agencies designated to provide such assistance, which program must meet such reasonable requirements as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe for the purpose of assuring that assistance is provided to needy persons in the rural areas of the State;

"(IV) estimates the amount of expenditures necessary for the provision of the assistance described in the program and related administrative expenses, up to the amount provided for payment by paragraph (1)(A)(i);

"(V) provides that persons to whom such assistance is made available may use such assistance to acquire equipment for procuring food by hunting and fishing in conformity with section 3(g)(6) of this Act;

"(VI) requires that the income and resources standards of eligibility, benefit levels, and other program standards, including but not limited to processing time, notice, and hearing requirements, for the program for the provision of such assistance shall not be more restrictive or less beneficial to program applicants and participants than such eligibility standards, benefit levels, and other program standards applicable to households under the food stamp program in the nonrural areas of Alaska;

"(VII) assures that by not later than January 1, 1988, and January 1, 1989, the State will submit reports to the Secretary on the operation of such program and its effectiveness in meeting the food needs of needy persons in rural areas of the State; and

"(VIII) includes such other information as the Secretary may require.

The State may submit for the approval of the Secretary any proposed revisions of such plan but no revision shall be implemented unless it has been approved by the Secretary. In formulating its initial plan under this subparagraph, and any revisions thereof, the State shall consult with representatives of the population to be served by the program, including representatives of the native populations of the rural areas of Alaska.

"(ii)(I) The Secretary shall approve or disapprove the initial plan submitted pursuant to subdivision (i) no later than August 1, 1985, and shall approve or disapprove any proposed revision to the plan no later than sixty days after it is submitted. The Secretary shall approve any plan, or any revision thereof, that complies with the requirements of subdivision (i). If the initial plan is disapproved because it does not comply with any of the requirements of that subdivision the Secretary shall, except as provided in subdivision (ii)(II), notify the appropriate agency in the State that payments will not be made to it under paragraph (1) until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply, and until the Secretary is so satisfied, the Secretary will make no payments.

"(II) The Secretary may suspend the denial of payments under subdivision (ii)(I) for such period as the Secretary determines appropriate and instead withhold payments provided for under paragraph (1), in whole or in part, until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any failure to comply with the requirements of subdivision (i), at which time such withheld payments shall be paid.

"(B)(i) The State shall provide for a biennial audit of expenditures under its program for the provision of the assistance described in paragraph (1)(A)(i), and within one hundred and twenty days after the end of each fiscal year in which the audit is made, shall report to the Secretary the findings of such audit.

"(ii) Within one hundred and twenty days after the end of the fiscal year, the State shall provide the Secretary with a statement as to whether the payments received under paragraph (1) for that fiscal year exceeded the expenditures by it during that year for which payment is authorized under this subsection, and if so, by how much, and such other information as the Secretary may require.

"(iii)(I) If the Secretary finds that there is a substantial failure by the State to comply with any of the requirements of subdivisions (i) and (ii), or to comply with the requirements of paragraph (2)(A)(i) in the administration of a plan approved under paragraph (2)(A)(ii), the Secretary shall, except as provided in subdivision (iii)(II), notify the appropriate agency in the State that further payments will not be made to it under paragraph (1) until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply, and until the Secretary is so satisfied, the Secretary shall make no further payments.

"(II) The Secretary may suspend the termination of payments under subdivision (iii)(I) for such period as the Secretary determines appropriate, and instead withhold payments provided for under paragraph (1), in whole or in part, until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be any failure to comply with the requirements of subdivisions (i) and (ii) and paragraph (2)(A)(i), at which time such withheld payments shall be paid.

"(III) Upon a finding under subdivision (iii)(I) of a substantial failure to comply with any of the requirements of subdivisions (i) and (ii) and paragraph (2)(A)(i), the Secretary may in addition to or in lieu of any action taken under subdivisions (iii)(I) and (iii)(II), refer the matter to the Attorney General with a request that injunctive relief be sought to require compliance by the State of Alaska, and upon suit by the Attorney General in an appropriate district court of the United States and a showing that noncompliance has occurred, appropriate injunctive relief shall issue.

"(3)(A) The Secretary shall provide for the review of the programs for the provision of the assistance described in paragraph (1)(A)(i) for which payments are made under this subsection.

"(B) The Secretary is authorized as the Secretary deems practicable to provide technical assistance with respect to the program for the provision of the assistance described in paragraph (1)(A)(i).

"(4) Whoever knowingly and willfully embezzles, misapplies, steals, or obtains by fraud, false statement, or forgery, any funds, assets, or property provided or financed under this subsection shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both, but if the value of the funds, assets or property involved is not over $200, the penalty shall be a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"(5) At the request of the State, the Secretary shall make available to the State, in accordance with the provisions of section 7 of this Act, coupons for use in the program for providing noncash food assistance to needy persons in the rural areas of the State, which coupons shall be redeemable in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of this Act.

"(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, while the program carried out under this subsection is in operation, no household residing in the rural areas of Alaska shall be eligible to participate simultaneously in the regular food stamp program and the program carried out under this subsection.

"(7) Not later than March 1, 1988, and March 1, 1989, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate reports containing the Secretary's conclusions, based on monitoring, with respect to the progress of the State's program in meeting the nutritional needs of the needy in rural areas of Alaska, together with copies of the State reports submitted under paragraph (2)(A)(i).

"(8) The provisions of section 4(b) of this Act and the authority of the Secretary to establish temporary emergency standards of eligibility for victims of a disaster under section 5(h) of this Act shall apply to the program carried out under this subsection.

"(9) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection—

"(A) if the State of Alaska fails to submit, in accordance with paragraph (2)(A), an initial plan for operating the program to be carried out under this subsection, the food stamp program shall continue to be carried out in the rural areas of Alaska until such plan is submitted, approved, and implemented; and

"(B) the State of Alaska may, upon not less than one hundred and eighty days prior to written notice to the Secretary, elect to terminate the program carried out under this subsection and reinstate the food stamp program in the rural areas of Alaska. Any such termination shall be subject to such reasonable terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe in consultation with the State.".

CHARGES FOR REDEMPTION OF COUPONS

SEC. 112. (a) Section 10 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2019) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No financial institution may impose on or collect from a retail food store a fee or other charge for the redemption of coupons that are submitted to the financial institution in a manner consistent with the requirements, other than any requirements relating to cancellation of coupons, for the presentation of coupons by financial institutions to the Federal Reserve Banks.".

(b) The Secretary, in consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, shall issue regulations implementing the provisions of subsection (a).

STATE AGENCY LIABILITY

SEC. 113. (a) Effective with respect to the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1985, and each fiscal year thereafter, section 16(d) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2025(d)) is amended by striking out paragraphs (2) through (5) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) If a State agency's payment error rate for any fiscal year exceeds 5 per centum, the State agency shall, other than for good cause shown, be liable to the Secretary in an amount equal to the product of multiplying (1) the per centum by which its payment error rate for the fiscal year exceeds 5 per centum by (2) the total value of all coupons issued by the State agency for the fiscal year. Upon the assertion of a claim by the Secretary in the amount determined to be payable under this paragraph, the Secretary shall recover such amount through withholding from amounts otherwise payable to the State agency under this Act and, if such amounts are not adequate to satisfy the claim in full, the State agency shall pay to the Secretary the balance of any amount remaining due. The State agency may seek administrative and judicial review under section 14 of this Act of any claim or determination by the Secretary under this paragraph.".

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture shall, by not later than April 1, 1985, submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report describing—

(1) the effect, on the error rates of State agencies in administering the food stamp program, of the quality control procedures in effect on the date of enactment of this Act; and

(2) the statistical methods in effect on the date of enactment of this Act for calculating the error rates of State agencies in administering the food stamp program and the rationale for selecting and applying such methods.

COMMODITY SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM

SEC. 114. Section 5(a)(1) of the Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973 is amended by—

(1) inserting, after "two years," at the end of clause (1), "(2) shall permit local agencies administering the commodity supplemental food program, at their option, to provide supplemental commodities to low-income elderly persons under such terms and conditions as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, except that local agencies shall not terminate or reduce commodity assistance to women, infants, and children in order to provide such assistance to the elderly,"; and

(2) striking out the clause designation "(2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(3)".

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 115. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this title, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations implementing the provisions of this title within one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations implementing sections 101, 102(a)(1), 105(a)(2), and 112 by October 1, 1984.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. EMERSON

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EMERSON: Strike section 106, pages 8 through 10, and renumber the subsequent sections accordingly.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, my amendment restores the requirement that States continue to use the monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting [MRRB] provisions of the Food Stamp Act which were deleted in the subcommittee. Simply put, this provision is one that requires certain food stamp households to submit a report of their financial circumstances each month. Once a household is found eligible for food stamp benefits, these benefits are calculated based on the family's circumstance for a previous month.

This provision is aimed at reducing losses to the Food Stamp Program by eliminating overpayments to these households. Under the old system some households failed to report changes in their financial circumstances and thereby received benefits to which they were not entitled. Some people have described this procedure as onerous and one that should not be borne by those in need of food stamp benefits. I disagree. I believe this procedure is appropriate—it is not designed to remove eligible people from the Food Stamp Program. It is designed to ensure that only eligible people receive benefits in the amount to which they are entitled.

The Washington Post, of May 6, 1984, included an article by a member of its editorial page staff concerning the matter of monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting which I would like to include in the RECORD. This article is included in the committee report on H.R. 5151. The author discussed the recent charges by a District of Columbia Department of Human Services spokesman that cited this provision, MRRB, as the cause of a family's eviction problems. The details of the situation are found in the article. I would like to read part of this.

> Who is to blame? It is certainly true that if the government hadn't insisted on monthly reporting, the woman's check wouldn't have been cut off and the rent would probably have been paid. But the check also wouldn't have been cut off if the woman had taken a few minutes to mail in the form—a task that, despite dire predictions to the contrary, is being performed capably by almost all recipients covered by the requirement in every state.

The author goes on to discuss what I consider to be a problem with the public perception of welfare programs, including the Food Stamp Program, and the dependency factor. She asks:

> Are we really doing welfare clients a favor by assuming that they cannot bear the responsibility of mailing in a card once a month?

I do not believe we are. The family discussed in this article is large and receives more than $2,000 per month in cash and food stamps plus free medical care. The mother worries that her daughters "turned out the way I did * * * at home watching TV." I worry also and I believe that a system that perpetuates dependency does a disservice to both the families receiving assistance and those paying for it.

I believe it is our responsibility as legislators not only to set public policy on matters within our jurisdiction but also to ensure that the spirit as well as the letter of the law is carried out. The spirit—the image—of the Food Stamp Program is not the best. The author of this article sets forth a reason—

> One reason that welfare programs are held in low esteem by the general public is the belief that much of the money goes to people who aren't eligible. The sloppy way that most welfare departments used to maintain their records certainly lent credence to that belief. Having up-to-date records on clients should reduce the chance that money is misdirected, and also make it easier for welfare offices to respond to the frequent changes in a family's circumstances, which as the case illustrates, may increase as well as decrease its needs.

Improving the image and providing sound public policy is something we involved in the Food Stamp Program have tried to achieve. Requiring States to institute monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting for specific types of food stamp cases is one way to achieve this goal.

In addition, the chairman and I worked together on the job search provision included in the bill before us today. I think this is a partial answer to the problem posed by the family in the Post article. However, along with good job search and work programs, such as the ones we saw in San Diego last year, public assistance programs must be designed to ensure that the correct amount of benefits are paid to eligible families. Those receiving such assistance must cooperate in this process. To require less of them is to foster dependency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. EMERSON was allowed to proceed for an additional 2½ minutes.)

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe the requirement that monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting be a part of the Food Stamp Program must be kept. I remind you that this requirement does not apply to all households—migrants and the elderly and the disabled who have no earnings are exempt by law. States are able to request waivers for other households that are less likely to have changes in their circumstances affecting the level of food stamp benefits. The AFDC Program has required monthly reporting for over a year and many States use the same forms and procedure in their Food Stamp Program.

Mr. Chairman, I know there has been extensive opposition from special interest groups and from State welfare agencies concerning MRRB. I have heard that my own State of Missouri would like to see MRRB as an optional provision. However my State—whether MRRB is Mandatory or optional—will continue to use MRRB as a management tool to reduce error rates and ensure that the correct level of benefits is paid to food stamp participants. There are many States that would simply drop this provision and error rates and the amount of food stamp money spent in error would begin to climb again. I do not want to see that happen.

My amendment will save $45 million over a 3-year period, I urge members to adopt this amendment.

EVICTION OF A WELFARE FAMILY—WHO WAS REALLY TO BLAME?

(By Jodie T. Allen)

Welfare programs in this country have few admirers. Efforts to reform them, however, are impeded not only by disagreement on all sides about what "reform" means but also by the fact that the cases with which the system must deal are enormously complicated.

Consider, for example, the Bookers, a welfare family of 15 evicted from their home last month as a result of falling $2,000 behind on the rent. When the story was reported in this newspaper, the headline blamed the family's troubles on a "welfare error." A D.C. Department of Human Services spokesman laid the primary blame on "one of the Reagan administration's so-called reforms" of the welfare system. Details of the case, however, suggest that the question of blame is not so easily resolved.

The reform cited by the DHS official is a requirement, enacted by Congress in 1981, that certain welfare families fill out forms each month reaffirming that their income and family status still qualify them for benefits. The welfare mother in question, Mrs. Booker, had been mailing in these forms for about a year before she failed to do so in April 1983. The department sent her a warning notice, but when she still didn't respond, it cut off her welfare grant.

Mrs. Booker cited the illness and subsequent death of her father last June as the cause of her failure to file. She did not, however—for reasons that are unclear—reapply for welfare until mid-August. But she did go into the welfare office in June to have the family's food stamp benefits increased from $509 to $676 because of the welfare loss. In the meantime the rent went unpaid.

Mrs. Booker's tardiness in reapplying for welfare might be explained by the fact that two of her daughters, who then had four children of their own, continued to receive welfare benefits totaling $603 and free medical care. As a result the family's purchasing power was basically unaffected since the rent—which had absorbed most of Mrs. Booker's own welfare check—went unpaid and the value of her food stamps increased by $167. Ultimately, of course, the landlord lost patience and secured an eviction notice. After several months' delay, Mrs. Booker and her belongings were removed from the rundown house.

Who is to blame? It is certainly true that if the government hadn't insisted on monthly reporting, the woman's check wouldn't have been cut off and the rent would probably have been paid. But the check also wouldn't have been cut off if the woman had taken a few minutes to mail in the form—a task that, despite dire predictions to the contrary, is being performed capably by almost all recipients covered by the requirement in every state.

One reason that welfare programs are held in low esteem by the general public is the belief that much of the money goes to people who aren't eligible. The sloppy way that most welfare departments used to maintain their records certainly lent credence to that belief. Having up-to-date records on clients should reduce the chance that money is misdirected, and also make it easier for welfare offices to respond to the frequent changes in a family's circumstances, which—as the Booker case illustrates—may increase as well as decrease its needs.

It's too early to tell whether the new reporting requirements are an efficient way to reduce welfare payment errors—some states claim that administrative costs exceed savings. But the requirements may increase public confidence in welfare programs. Most people have to work all day to earn their income. Are we really doing welfare clients a favor by assuming that they cannot bear the responsibility of mailing in a card once a month?

Even if monthly reporting isn't at fault, it certainly looks as if the DHS would have saved money if it had simply paid off Mrs. Booker's back rent. (Now it may cost the department thousands of dollars a month to keep the family in two cramped hotel rooms until they find a new home.) But only a few months before Mrs. Booker's welfare check was cut off, she had also fallen behind in her rent and DHS had given her an emergency grant to get caught up. The department's rules prohibit frequent emergency grants for the sensible reason that recipients come to depend on them to pay their rent.

And what about Mrs. Booker's daughters? Since the time that her check was reinstated last September, two more of her daughters have had babies. As a result each is now eligible not only for a welfare grant for her child, but for a considerably larger grant for herself as the head of a separate welfare family. D.C. welfare payments are far from generous for a small household. But the large Booker household now receives more than $2000 a month in cash and food stamps plus free medical care. Another daughter is expecting a baby shortly.

Mrs. Booker worries that her daughters "turned out the same way I did . . . at home watching TV." Without some pressure and/or encouragement, that's all they're likely ever to do. But welfare law exempts them from participation in the WIN program which, with scant resources, tries to help welfare recipients find jobs. The District has experimented with a voluntary program for young welfare mothers, hoping to get them interested in and able to find jobs. But only a third of those contacted opted to participate.

At least in the case of the Booker family, critics might conclude that the welfare system has built, rather than alleviated, dependency. Would they be wrong?

ERROR RATES AND SANCTIONS IN THE FOOD STAMP PROGRAM

The 1982 Reconciliation Act required states to reduce rates of errors to 9% by 1983; to 7% by 1984; and, to 5% by 1985. Failure to acheive these rates of error will result in a penalty to states based on a percentage of the federal reimbursement for state administrative costs.

The federal government pays for 100% of food stamp benefit costs and 50% of state administrative costs.

Error rates have dropped 14% since 1981. The rate of payment error in the food stamp program was 9.9% in 1981 and 8.5% in 1983.

With a 9.9% rate of error, $900 million per year goes to food stamp participants who are either ineligible or receive too many food stamps.

H.R. 5151 emphasizes that states must reduce rates of error to 5% by 1985 and maintains current law sanctions through 1986.

Beginning with states' performance for 1986, and thereafter, sanctions will be based on the dollar equivalent of overpayments and payments to ineligible households—over and above the 5% tolerance level.

Collection of the sanction for any fiscal year would occur only after the actual error rate for the fiscal year is determined after the end of the year. Therefore, the increased sanctions required by H.R. 5151 will not be collected until 1987, at the earliest.

The "dollar for dollar" state liability that would apply beginning with fiscal year 1986 would not reduce or be taken from household benefits.

Many states have done exceptional jobs in running efficient programs and have achieved significant reductions in the rates of error. Others have not. Whether this diversity relates to states placing higher priorities on the administration of other assistance programs, complexities within a state, or other reasons is not known.

H.R. 5151 includes a provision requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to report, no later than Apirl 1, 1985, to the House Committe on Agriculture and the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry on:

(1) the effect that the current law error rate goals and fiscal sanctions and incentives have had on state food stamp error rates; and

(2) the statistical methods utilized by the Department to calculate state error rates, including the rationale for using these methods.

No food stamp error rate sanctions have ever been collected since they were imposed by law in 1980.

The Food Stamp Act contains incentives—increases in the rate of federal reimbursement—for those states with rates of error below 5%.

According to a report by the General Accounting Office:

To reduce benefit errors, systems have been established to hold state and federal organizations financially liable (sanctions) for excessive errors in the day-to-day administration of the Food Stamp, Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), and the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) Programs.

Error rate limits above which sanctions can be imposed have varied by year, by program, and from state to state for the same program. These variations will continue but not to the extent that previously existed. For fiscal year 1985 and thereafter, the target rates for the AGDC, SSI, and Food Stamp Programs will be 3, 4, and 5 percent, respectively.

The Food Stamp error rate system results in proportionately smaller sanctions because of (1) its higher target error rate and (2) its specific procedures for calculating sanction amounts based on a percentage of federally reimbursed administrative costs instead of the amount of benefits issued, as in the AFDC and SSI Programs.

States had not reimbursed the federal government for any sanction amounts. A major reason was that the Departments of Agriculture and Health and Human Services had waived states' liability based on their promises to take corrective action. In contrast, the federal government has paid or acknowledged owing about $161 million for excessive overpayments of federally administered, state-financed SSI benefits.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman on the amendment.

Is it not true that when the States have been given the option, as they have been in the past, the fact is that they did not use it and so therefore to suggest that somehow we are preserving this reporting requirement by making it optional in the bill is in fact to delete it entirely?

Mr. EMERSON. Well, there is some extensive history of that.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

□ 1710

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the amendments in working out the effort here, that is largely a bipartisan effort, in which we agree to disagree and, therefore, the gentleman from Missouri has offered this amendment.

The bill itself provides that the States would have the option of using the monthly reporting and retrospective accounting requirement. There are several reasons why we have made this optional. Let me discuss each of those reasons, if I might.

The first is that there is, it seems to me, a basic philosophy, that certainly has drawn a great deal of attention over the last few years, of this administration that we ought to minimize the redtape and the requirements that are now a burden on the States; that when it comes to programs like this, while the Federal Government ought to set goals and set some standards, that the actual implementation of those goals, the enforcement of those goals really ought to be left up to the States to do as they see fit to do, pursuant to Federal requirements.

The problem with monthly reporting and retrospective accounting is it is exactly the opposite of that kind of philosophy. We not only set the goals in terms of the error rates that ought to be achieved by all of the States, but in this instance we are actually telling each of the States, mandating each of the States, how they will enforce that particular requirement. The result has been, frankly, a bureaucratic and red-tape nightmare.

Listen to the States. Thirty-eight of the States say please make this optional. There are some States that say yes, we will use this, we want to use it. Even the States that use it now, say it ought to be optional with the States because the States vary in terms of what will work as far as enforcement is concerned.

Listen. Listen to the reports that have been made on this issue. The Wall Street Journal recently published an article that looked at this whole issue and stated that what we have created here is a "bureaucratic never-never land." That is a quote from that article. In fact, what is happening is that this program, instead of reducing the cost to the Government, is increasing the cost to the Government.

So basically it is not working. What was intended to work is simply not working at the present time.

It is more difficult to verify qualifications because there is an increasing burden of paperwork that everyone has to shuffle through because of this mandate, so they are not looking at qualifications, they are not doing the things they ought to be doing in terms of ensuring that people who are entitled to these benefits in fact meet those qualifications. They are simply shuffling paperwork.

I think the Wall Street Journal article refers to some of these forms as like completing an income tax report.

The second problem is that it is not cost effective. There have been three pilot projects involved here, one in Colorado, one in Michigan, and one in Illinois. In all three of those pilot projects they show no savings in terms of the costs, and there is no error reduction as a result of implementing this process.

What has happened then, as a result of the problems that are incurred by the States in implementing monthly reporting? They are now seeking waivers and the administration argues that we have a waiver process so that those States who feel like they cannot comply with monthly reporting can simply apply for a waiver.

The problem is that the waiver process has become another bureaucratic nightmare in which States have to get in line, make their applications in order to get a waiver.

Let me just quote from one letter that we received from the Vermont Human Services Commissioner. He says, "Finally, I want to emphasize my support for making monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting a State option. All efforts to date to make it possible for States to obtain waivers from USDA from this onerous requirement have been dismal failures. Confusion and paper shuffling have proliferated. Waivers reluctantly and belatedly granted are so short lived that within a few months of implementation States have to resubmit and rejustify their requests. The constant uncertainty and administrative burden involved in resubmitting requests contribute to the continual instability and resultant costs of this program."

There is without question, in addition to all of this, an adverse effect on those in need. As a matter of fact, the Michigan pilot project established that 90 percent of those individuals who were terminated in fact met the qualifications, but found it too difficult to submit the forms that were required under this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. PANETTA was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. PANETTA. Finally, and I think this is the point I would like to make to the Members, I do think we have a responsibility to tell the States that they have to achieve certain error rate targets, goals, and indeed in this bill what we do is to increase the penalty for States that fail to achieve a 5-percent error rate. We think that is legitimate. That is really where the Federal role is.

Let us set the goal and let us allow the States to try to meet their goal. But how they do it really ought to be left to the States.

The point is this, in summary: I think that what we have provided here in making this optional is in keeping with the basic philosophy of federalism, that it really ought to be up to the States to determine how they enforce the provisions that are established at the Federal level.

The second point that I think is important is that this procedure just does not happen to be working right now. I wish it were working. It is not working and we ought to recognize that it is not working. It is not verifying those that it was intended to verify and it is not cost effective.

The key I think, as I have stated, is that this bill does increase the penalties in terms of overall error rate goals, and I think that is where we have a legitimate role to play at the Federal level.

So for all of these reasons I would urge the Members to vote against this amendment.

Mr. STENHOLM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STENHOLM. I want to make clear for the Members listening that they understand what you have just emphasized, what the committee is trying to do in regard to the monthly reporting requirement. What we are saying is that we recognize there are error rates at greater levels than we would like to see in many States. But rather than mandate monthly reporting, which evidence has been presented to the committee indicates, and I know in my district I have been convinced that mandating monthly reports in all States is not helpful to reducing error rates and the overall cost of the program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. STENHOLM and by unanimous consent Mr. PANETTA was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. STENHOLM. While I will oppose this particular amendment, it makes much more sense to me to say to the States "Lower your error rate, but we will let you do it the way you want to. If you do not, you are going to pay an increased penalty. If you do, you are going to be rewarded." And the overall cost of the program will be less, we believe, and you believe, Mr. Chairman, and I agree with you, by allowing the States to do it rather than us mandating them to do something which may be contrary to the best wishes of all of us in lowering the costs.

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman is correct, and that is exactly the goal that we are seeking in this legislation. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. EMERSON. I just want to raise one brief point here in response to what the chairman has said about my amendment, and that is to say why do you select monthly reporting for optional treatment and not other aspects of the program? What, for example, if we wanted or if the States wanted program standards to be optional, or shelter deductions? We would say no, that this is a program that is national and has to be uniform. We have to have standards.

So that is the point of my amendment, to maintain standards against which everyone in the country can operate.

Mr. PANETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. I guess I think the only response is that it is pretty clear from the evidence we are getting with regards to this particular requirement that it is not working and that in fact it is doing exactly the opposite of what it was intended to do in terms of its cost effectiveness.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DURBIN. Let me begin by commending my colleague from Missouri, because I know that through committee hearings and his efforts on this legislation that he is doing the best that he can under the circumstances to make certain that this program is handled in an efficient manner, and one which does credit to the Federal Government for its efforts to try to help people who really do need help.

I found it interesting when we started discussing this bill in committee and the officials from the State of Illinois contacted me that their complaint about our legislation was not the fact that we were going to penalize them if they did not show that there were deficiencies, that they had payouts that were wrong. They brought to my attention the fact that we were suggesting some sort of mandatory reporting. That was what they thought to be counterproductive, actually counterproductive, because their own personal experience showed that the wrong things occurred when they said to the food stamp recipients to send in a monthly report or you will not qualify for food stamps. In the first instance they found that the people who were dropped from the rolls, when they went back and analyzed the people and investigated, were really the people who needed the food stamps and were deserving, and were the people who should be receiving them.

□ 1720

So the ones who were falling off the rolls were not people who were in fact cheating. The second thing that was found, it was very expensive to have mandatory monthly reporting.

In some instances in New Jersey, for example, it was reported that where the average food stamp benefit was $43 per month, the monthly reporting requirement was costing $25 a month to process and was not hitting the people who should be taken from the rolls.

I think one of the things that we have to also remember is that merely asking a recipient to send in some monthly form is no guarantee that it will be accurate, honest, or true. If that is the only requirement we are using to check people, there is no guarantee it will clean the rolls.

One of the things I asked for in this committee and was adopted as part of this legislation was for the Department of Agriculture to initiate a study to find the most effective ways to make certain that the Food Stamp Program and all Federal programs in this area were handled in an efficient and honest manner.

I think it is our best tactic at this point to say to the States as we do in this legislation:

> We are giving you a goal to make certain that you are in fact paying out the money honestly; the way you achieve it we will leave in your hands.

We are taking Government off their back when it comes to a means, but we are telling them what the end has to be. "We want an honest payout with respect to food recipients."

I rise in reluctant opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri and I think with this study we may find even more efficient methods to deal with this problem.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EMERSON. I thank the gentleman.

The new system is not intended to remove anyone from the program; it is designed to make sure the benefits reflect the true financial circumstances of households in the program.

I may say to the gentleman that the preliminary results from the USDA research in Illinois indicate that MRRB did not reduce participation by eligible households. Moreover, recipients reported that they did not have problems filling out the report form.

It should be stressed here that there are also many procedural protections for clients; under the current system, MRRB households which fail to file complete reports must be informed about what must be done to complete the report and afforded 10 more days in which to send in an acceptable report.

Mr. DURBIN. I would say to the gentleman in response that a study that is to be released very soon from a group in Cambridge, MA, indicates that the administrative costs of the monthly reporting were increasing substantially in the State of Illinois, 57 percent as a result of this project.

The conclusion of the study was that the people who were dropped from the rolls were truly needy recipients who just failed to send in the monthly form.

I think we are on the right track in setting a goal. When we tell the State how to implement that goal we are going too far.

Let us hold them to a standard, but let us leave to them the flexibility of meeting that goal in the most efficient manner.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DURBIN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EMERSON. Just to keep the record as full as possible here, because I imagine we will over the years be back to the subject again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. EMERSON and by unanimous consent, Mr. DURBIN was allowed to proceed for an additional 30 seconds.)

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DURBIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EMERSON. One of the great problems with Illinois was at the time this study was being undertaken you were also implementing a new computer procedure and that probably, as much as anything, had to do with the difficulties.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious listening to this debate that we have a decision to make here. This is either a Federal program or it is not a Federal program. Now it seems to me when I look at the bill and when I read through 5151, the committee specifically decided they were going to make this a Federal program, that the one recommendation that they ignored with regard to nutritional programs was moving to a State block grant program.

Now I am going to give you a chance to correct that a little bit later but that is not the point of this particular amendment.

This amendment speaks to the bill that is before us. The bill that is before us had made a conscious determination that we are not going to move toward more State discretion but instead, we are going to keep this program as a Federal program.

Now if that is the case, then all of this talk about giving the States more options and giving them an additional kind of discretion seems to me to be absurd.

If you are going to do that, then why not simply block grant the program, put the onus on the States, oversight the program from the Federal level and if the States are not performing up to par both in delivering nutritional needs to their constituents or with too much error or fraud, then come down on them from the Federal level.

You can do that or you can go the direction that the committee obviously decided to go; keep the program in Federal hands and then micro-manage the program out of Washington.

Now it is interesting to me that it is only when we get a fraud that we decided that we are not going to micromanage the program; that there we are going to let it open to the States to decide how to deal with this problem. And that bothers me, because the one reform that we achieved back in 1981 aimed at doing something about fraud was the monthly reporting requirement.

That was the chief antifraud provision that we achieved when we passed reforms back in 1981.

We delayed and delayed and delayed and delayed the implementation of it. Finally we get to January of this year and we put it into effect and 6 months later we are back saying we want to make it optional again.

It seems to me that we do something that is going to actually stop fraud in the food stamp program. We know the overissuances in the food stamp program are still costing the taxpayers a billion dollars a year. That is $1 billion that the taxpayers are laying out that they are not getting what they are supposed to be getting for their money.

Government studies have indicated that if you add error, fraud, and abuse to that whole overissuance problem that the figure may go as high as $2 billion.

Now if that is the situation, then it seems to me that we ought to be doing something at the Federal level if we decide this is a Federal program to assure ourselves that we are not going to have that kind of fraud, waste, abuse, and overissuance in the program, that we really ought to be doing something such as the gentleman from Missouri has suggested, and that is assuring ourselves that there is a standardized reporting requirement that the Federal Government can rely upon coming from all of the States across the country.

That is all it seems to me that he is asking for. If we really want to give discretion to the States, I am all for that. But then let us give discretion to the States to manage the program in a way that they regard as most effective for the States.

Then as I say, you will have that opportunity by voting for a block grant approach to this program which it seems to me speaks exactly to all of the concerns and the points raised with regard to this amendment in opposition to it.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I find no quarrel with the argument that he is making today. The point that I am making and will make again in regard to this specific amendment is that monthly reporting is not working. Now we can get enjoined in the philosophical argument of whether we want to go completely to the State run or completely to the Federal run but we are not going to decide that today.

This gentleman probably will come down closer in agreement to the argument that the gentleman is making than I will going the other direction. But the point in this amendment is that montly reporting is not working, at least to my satisfaction and to most of the members of this committee who have looked at it.

And it seems more reasonable for us to attempt to use the carrot and the stick and say to the States: "If you get your error rates under control you are going to be rewarded, if not, you are going to be penalized." That is the argument.

Mr. WALKER. I do not have a particular argument with the gentleman if you are willing to give the States the opportunity to manage more than simply the fraud portions of the program.

But the decision has been made here to go the opposite direction, "We will micromanage what you do in terms of meeting the needs of your people."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WALKER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WALKER. I also think it is important to recognize here that the gentleman says that the program is not working; we have had basically a 6 months' experience with this program and that the main reason why it is not working is because it is expensive.

Fraud is expensive, too. We have had a 20-year experience now with this program. We have never come up with anything that is acceptable to us in managing fraud. And the fraud continues to get more and more and more expensive for the taxpayer.

Yet every time we come up with an antifraud program, we come back to the House and say, "That is not working" so we abandon that one, too. Why not try this one? It has only been in effect 6 months. It seems to me it would be worth moving forward on.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. EMERSON. To the gentleman from Texas, I dare say if we had food stamps operating in the form of block grants to the States, that we would probably have 50 States accepting MRRB as a requirement.

□ 1730

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief.

I just want to point out what we have done in this bill with respect to this amendment and I oppose this amendment.

First of all we have attempted to try and bring about the corrections to the problems of error rates. In fact, in some sense and I will have an amendment later on, I think we have gone too far and I think we ought to have a carrot as much as a stick. We have got to remember we are not prohibiting monthly reporting here, we are giving it as an option.

At the same time in this bill, we have increased tremendously the penalties to States for having an error rate in excess of 5 percent. By doing this, we are moving the cost of this program substantially over to the States if they have higher than 5 percent error rates.

Thus, what we have done is we have told the States that you have got to reduce your error rates. If you want to use monthly reporting to do this that is an option you have. But if a State finds that the use of monthly reporting is counterproductive, it does not assist them, it causes too much paperwork, it interferes with other ways to control the costs of their program, then do something else, but get your error rate under control.

The sanctions in this bill in the error rate sector are tremendously increased. Instead of a percentage of States administration costs based on the error rate, in the bill there is a dollar for dollar penalty to the State equal to the lost benefits if you are over a certain error rate. We have really given them the stick. They will get error rate under control. They will have to. Their State legislators will be screaming at them if they do not.

So let the States have the option. If it works, let them use it. If it does not work, let them not use it.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment.

This bill is a carefully crafted piece of legislation and puts in some very strict penalties for the very things we would all agree should be avoided; namely, an undesirable or unjustified rise in food stamp error rates.

The reason we are doing this in this bill, under the leadership of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], is that the MRRB system which—with all due respect to my friend from Missouri—is not working. It has not been in place for only 6 months, as indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER]. There have been several studies that have been underway for quite a while. The results of those studies are now in.

In Colorado there was a 90-percent increase in paperwork as a result of MRRB being in place. Furthermore, error rates did not significantly come down. In fact, in some cases they went up. In fact, it is the very area we want to bring them down, I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, where they went up. In policing the area of earned income of the family, error rates actually went up, not down with MRRB. It is not an effective system of administering food stamps.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] can talk all he wants about the philosophical desirability of Federal versus local control. Fine, we might all agree with him. But why impose an unworkable system and then sell it under the banner that it is Federal?

I love local programs when they work. Why do we not let local programs, in this case, work?

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield, I just wondered whether the gentleman is going to support my block grant amendment.

Mr. MOODY. Well, I will if it produces an adequate amount of money.

Mr. WALKER. It is the same amount of money as in the bill.

Mr. MOODY. I will look it over and let the gentleman know at the time. But let us deal with this issue once and for all. Let us deal with the amendment before us. We are not debating the gentleman's amendment. We will do so shortly, I trust. We are debating the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, and I have problems with the gentleman's amendment.

To digress, the gentleman from Pennsylvania's amendment does not put error rate penalties in and the penalties are in the bill before us. H.R. 5151, for not achieving the 5-percent error rate. By 1986 the penalties would go up substantially for not achieving a 5-percent error rate, and that is probably good because all of us are concerned with error rates in food stamps even if administered purely by block grants.

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] cannot argue both sides of the street, that he wants a block grant, and at the same time wants a federally mandated program that mandates a very inefficient, ineffective, costly, paperwork-ridden, bureaucratic system, which is what MRRB has uncontrovertably turned out to be.

So, I would urge my colleagues, of both parties because it is very bipartisan issue, to oppose the Emerson amendment.

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise reluctantly to oppose my friend from Missouri on this particular amendment, but I am going to do so because I have a firm belief in the incentive system in regard to the relationship between the Federal Government and the States.

Now, we do a lot of talking up here about Federal authority over this and Federal regulation over this and so on, but it only works as well as you get a State to help you make it work. And only as well as that system is based on a responsibility for the State to respond. They have responded and responded well, Mr. Chairman. I think that it is time that we backed away slowly and cede a little authority and a little responsibility and more and more so to these States, particularly in regard to the MRRB program, which has not worked.

So I stand here to oppose this because I think it is time that we have given the States the authority to regulate. They have performed very well. I think that we should provide the kind of incentive that says that we are a partner in these kinds of programs and you do have a responsibility on the State level because we are going to give you that responsibility. If you do not, we are going to fine you heavily.

The program is working. When I was first associated with the food stamp program there was no doubt about it. In some areas the error rates were running as high as 15, 20, 25 percent. Today they are much lower. It indicates a willingness and a responsibility and the acceptance of that responsibility primarily through State activity.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, just a few comments to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to the block grant proposal that he will offer. I probably will support it, even though he will not propose a program that has been well thought out and thoroughly researched and all of the problems that are resolved in it, the basic concept, I think, of consistency, is important for us.

I agree to the point that has been made in this debate that if you are for monthly reporting being voluntary and allowing States rights in one position, as the gentleman from Missouri, who I greatly respect, has pointed out, why not in other areas? A very good question.

I guess the only answer to that that I could say is that we have not been able to delineate other areas in which we have received a consensus that this is a specific area that we can implement that will have a chance of working.

As we look at those areas, certainly this Member will be supporting them.

The debate in this particular instance can be summarized by saying, I think that when you speak to the folks back home who are trying to implement this particular program, mandatory monthly reporting, dictated by the Federal Government to States, is not as helpful to reducing the error rate as allowing the individual States to make that decision themselves, providing an incentive for them to do that, which you have already heard one Member will offer an amendment to reduce the penalty, which I will strongly oppose for the reason I am giving in opposition to this particular amendment.

So the basic point is what we are doing today is not working. Listen to the folks back home. The challenge to us in this Congress is to try to make Government work better. Opposition to this amendment, I believe, will do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Chairman, during the vote on the Emerson amendment, rollcall No. 339, I was detained by other important business and missed the vote.

I supported the Emerson amendment and should like the record to show that had I been present I would have voted "aye."

Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill and would like to ask the gentleman from California about a specific provision in the bill which addresses one of the problems facing the homeless in our Nation. But first I would like to share with my colleagues a few words about a recent firsthand experience I had related to the homeless in the district I represent.

In June, I was asked by Nashville magazine, a local magazine in Nashville, to spend 2 days and 2 nights on the streets of Nashville, dressed as a homeless person, with only $5 in my pocket to spend the entire weekend.

Probably the greatest lesson I learned from this experience is that all street people do not fall into the stereotypes that many have constructed. Instead I found among many of these people a sense of caring, as well as laughter, cunning, intellect, ambition and, perhaps most assuring, a sense of hope among many people we believe are hopeless.

Nashville's—and the Nation's—homeless are not all winos, prostitutes, drug addicts, or even mentally ill. Sure, some I met clearly have mental and physical handicaps that need immediate attention. Some have lost their motivation and desire to go anywhere or do anything but roam about town. Others seem content to live a nomadic, hobo-like existence.

My greatest concern goes to the homeless whose conversations still contained words of optimism. While they spend their days busily trying to fulfill the immediate necessities of life, they continue to talk of finding a permanent job, of finding a better place to stay, of being reunited with their families and friends.

It is for these people—these people who have not been reached by the trickling down effect of the current economic recovery—who I am happy to speak out for in favor of this legislation.

While I do not claim that my experience as a street person made me an expert in the plight of our Nation's homeless or that it gave me all the answers to this tragic problem, it did give me an understanding of what some of the problems on the streets are. It also gave me the desire to look for solutions to some of these problems.

I believe the bill currently being debated takes an important first step in providing a solution to one of these problems: the nutritional needs of the homeless.

Under current law, our Nation's homeless face an almost impossible hurdle in trying to qualify for food stamps. While many of these people meet all the other eligibility requirements, they cannot receive food stamps because they do not have a permanent address. In Nashville, we have finally been successful in qualifying many homeless individuals for food stamps who meet the eligibility requirements by certifying their permanent address to be a local shelter.

The bill before us achieves a similar result and I would like to ask the gentleman from California to explain the specific legislative changes that allow the homeless to qualify for food stamps.

□ 1810

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONER of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his support of the bill and commend him for the work that he has done to try to assist the homeless. He has, I think, taken on a rather unique experience to live with the homeless and experience the problems that they are having.

In fact, the President's Commission on Hunger looked at the problem of those who are homeless and recommended that they be allowed to participate in the program.

So as a result of that, the first section of the bill that is before the House, H.R. 5151, provides the assurance that individuals who otherwise meet the eligibility criteria for the Food Stamp Program but who have no permanent address, who are homeless, nevertheless can qualify for those benefits.

Just as the gentleman from Tennessee has done, we, too, have recognized the need to try to address the growing problem of feeding the homeless, and I believe this bill will make sure that the homeless will have access to this program.

Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] for his explanation and commend the committee for bringing this measure to the floor.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COLEMAN OF MISSOURI

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri: Strike section 107(a), page 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 107. (a) Section 5(g) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2014(g)) is amended by—

(1) in the first sentence, striking out "$1,500" and "$3,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,250" and "$3,500", respectively; and

(2) inserting in the second sentence, "and any other property, real or personal, to the extent that it is directly related to the maintenance or use of such vehicle" after the words "physically disabled household member".

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, my amendment maintains the increase in the resource limits of the Food Stamp Program which are presently contained in this bill, H.R. 5151, and retains the current policy on cars in the program and saves a total of $146 million over 3 years.

If I might, I would like to review exactly what the present law is and what the proposed resource levels are in this bill because I think it would be very informative for the general membership. Right now most families are allowed resources of $1,500. The elderly are allowed $3,000, and the eligibility for food stamps is still retained.

Under H.R. 5151 these resource limits are increased from $1,500 to $2,250 for everybody but the senior citizens, and for senior citizens it is increased from $3,000 to $3,500, as it does by my amendment. So I do not want anybody to think I do anything differently with resource limits other than the car. My amendment is directed only at the value of the car in question.

Now, I do believe that we ought to recognize that for people to receive food stamps in this country they might have the following resources and still be able to receive food stamps, because the following assets are totally disregarded when someone goes down and applies for food stamps: The home in which they live and the property, regardless of the number of acres, around the home; all of their household goods are exempt such as furniture, appliances, and so forth; the cash value of any life insurance is completely excluded from the resource limitation, or pension funds; and all cars. I want to emphasize that all cars are exempt if they are used for producing incomes, and most cars worth less than $4,500. That is in the current law. And any irrevocable trust funds. All of this is totally disregarded when we sit down and figure out whether someone is eligible or not.

This is just a partial list of the property, Mr. Chairman, that is not counted in determining food stamp eligibility. On top of that, most families can have $1,500 in cash or assets other than what I have mentioned already and still be eligible for food stamps.

It is the language in the proposal that we have before us that will increase the threshold value of the automobile from $4,500 to $5,500 that I have a problem with, and I find it unnecessary to increase that value. The present policy regarding the car and the Food Stamp Program provides that the entire value of this automobile is exempt if the car is used for producing income consistent with its value or if it is necessary for long-distance travel—for example, migrants, because they need a car to get from one location or one farm to the other. Or if it is used for subsistence hunting or fishing in those areas where people hunt and fish for a living; or if it is needed by physically disabled people.

I am not touching any of this. Therefore, we are not discussing these cars, and anybody who brings up these cars to oppose my amendment is simply dragging a red herring because I am not touching any of those.

If a car is not exempt and does not fall within the exemptions that I just mentioned, it is evaluated on the basis of its wholesale value by the Department of Agriculture. And if it is over $4,500, then it is counted toward the resource maximum, and these types of cars include those cars needed to go to and from work, to training school or school, to look for work, or needed specifically for household transportation.

So let me give an example. If a family has three cars under present law, they could have a 1982 Ford Escort for transportation to a training school; they might also have a 1983 Chevette to go to work; and they also might have a 1983 Dodge Omni, all of which are valued at less than $4,500, and their food stamp eligibility would not be affected. In fact, this same family that might have these three fairly new cars could also have $1,500 in the bank and still be eligible for food stamps. I suggest that is a very generous basis for eligibility for this program.

Now, according to the Department of Agriculture on the characteristics of the recipients of food stamps and from the latest information we have for 1981, 90 percent of all households receiving food stamps have assets which are counted toward eligibility of less than $500, and half of those receiving benefits have no countable assets at all. That means they do not have a nickel in the bank. Therefore, an average family receiving food stamp benefits might have all the property I mentioned previously, the home, the property, the insurance policies, the pension funds, the household goods, the personal effects, a bank account with $500 in it, and three cars for transportation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, they could have all of these assets and could have three cars up to a value of $4,500 and still receive food stamps. Now, it makes no sense to me why we should be supporting an increase in the value of these cars, the threshold value of the cars from $4,500 under present law to $5,500 under the bill, because these are cars that are worth more than cars the average Americans are driving today.

According to the Automobile Dealers Association, the average age of a car in this country is 7.2 years. That means the average American is driving a 1976 or 1977 car.

Now, let us go through it and look at what these cars might be in their value. Remember, a food stamp recipient can drive a $4,500 car and in fact might have three $4,500 cars and still be eligible, but the average taxpayer, the average driver in this country, is driving a 1977 Ford station wagon valued at $1,875 or maybe a 1977 Dodge valued at $2,300 or a 1977 Pontiac Firebird valued at $3,150.

I could give a lot more on that, but the point of it is that he is driving a car worth less than what we now have for the maximum amount for a food stamp recipient to drive.

The food stamp program as it already exists is very generous, and I do not think we need to raise it any further. Under the present food stamp law, with these cars that I am now going to list, a person would be eligible to receive food stamps and drive these cars: A 1982 Chrysler LeBaron worth $6,000; a 1979 Lincoln Continental valued—this is the wholesale value again, and the National Association of Used Car Dealers is what the USDA uses—a Chrysler LeBaron worth $6,000; and the wholesale value, which is counted, of the Lincoln Continental, 1979, $5,825; or a 1983 Chevrolet Chevette, which is valued at $4,200. These would all be eligible to receive food stamps.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, wants to add on to these to allow food stamp recipients to drive even newer cars and more expensive cars than those I just got through mentioning. It is quite a contrast when we point out that the average American who is paying the bill for the food stamp recipients is driving a 1977 Ford station wagon and the opponents of my amendment who support the bill or who might support another amendment down the line want food stamp recipients to drive a 1983 Ford LTD.

□ 1820

I think there is quite a contrast there. We ought to recognize that when we vote.

Frankly, my generosity is limited to the 1982 Chrysler LeBaron. that is what you can drive now and still get food stamps. Those people who want additional amendments want to raise that up even further and I do not think we should do that.

Let me tell you what cars would be eligible to drive, if my amendment fails or any amendment to my amendment were to succeed: You would be able to be eligible for food stamps and still drive to the welfare office in a 1982 Cadillac Cimarron, valued at $7,000. You could drive with the Chevrolet Malibu, 1983 model, worth $7,200, you would still be eligible for the food stamps under this bill and any amendment to the Coleman amendment.

You could drive a 1983 Chrysler LeBaron worth almost $7,000 or maybe you would like to drive up in a 1979 Porsche worth $7,200.

So what I am pointing out is why we do not need to raise this asset limit at all from $4,500 to $5,500. It is generous enough. I think our constitutents would want to know why these people are driving these cars and still be eligible for food stamps.

Now I am sure I have heard these arguments in committee, the gentleman from California will probably say "Well, we never increased the value of the $4,500 exemption and maybe in 1984 dollars this used car exemption should be worth over $8,000 or so."

Well, the point is not that a car might be worth more today, but that these cars are worth so much money today, on today's market and again the average taxpayer is driving a 7-year-old car worth a heck of a lot less and nobody is indexing or gradually phasing in an increase in value of the average taxpayer's car.

So, I suggest we not do the same or get into that position with increasing this asset for food stamp eligibility.

Now some will say well, this was in the President's recommendation the Commission made to him. I say well, you can pick and choose your recommendations because there were also other recommendations made in the President's Commission, and I do not think that the chairman is going to stand up and support a block grant amendment today, but that was in the Commission's task force.

There are other suggestions such as the cash out of the food stamp for the elderly and disabled; that is not in this bill. There was something about immediately forcing the States to live up to a 5-percent error rate. That is not in this bill. There are a lot of things not in the bill.

So I do not think that is a good argument because the task force recommended that the car be increased that we have to follow that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank my colleagues.

I will wrap this up at this point by suggesting that we have to have more of an argument that we have not increased the value of this car over a number of years. If you look at the statistics the average driver is driving a 7-year-old car worth less than what the average recipient of food stamps could drive under the terms of this bill.

I urge people to support my amendment and resist any amendments thereto. We will save $146 million over 3 years if my amendment is adopted and an additional $150 million in the 2 outyears if it is adopted. So it is almost $300 million that we can save by adopting the Coleman amendment by doing nothing other than present law.

I think it is something that our constituents are going to ask us, "Why did you vote to allow food stamp recipients to drive 1983 Chrysler LeBarons to the welfare office?" I think all of us ought to have a good answer tonight. The answer is: You did not, because you voted for the Coleman amendment and against all amendments thereto.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PANETTA TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COLEMAN OF MISSOURI

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PANETTA to the amendment offered by Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Strike out paragraph (2) of the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) in the second sentence—

"(A) after 'physically disabled household member' inserting 'and any other property, real or personal, to the extent that it is directly related to the maintenance or use of such vehicle'; and

"(B) inserting after '$4,500,' the following: 'except that the Secretary shall, on April 1, 1985, and on each April 1 thereafter, adjust such amount to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers, United States city average, for used cars (base year 1967 = 100), published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, for the twelve months ending the preceding December 31, and round the result to the nearest $100 increment: Provided, That such amount, as adjusted, may not exceed $5,500,' ".

Mr. PANETTA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offer here I think recognizes some of the concerns that have been indicated by the gentleman from Missouri but also recognizes the need to provide some flexibility with regard to the issue of the assets test.

Why is there a need for this flexibility? The point of any assets test is to ensure that those who are indeed in need qualify for the benefits that are provided. But if, in fact, that assets test does not keep up with present conditions, then what you are virtually doing is penalizing those in need who would otherwise qualify for those benefits under the assets test as established.

This area was addressed by the President's task forces and, obviously, while we are not taking 100 percent of all of their recommendations, the fact is we are taking a large majority of the recommendations that have been made by the President's task force.

They looked at the whole issue of assets requirements. The problem in this area is that most of the assets tests have not been updated since 1971; when it comes to personal assets. So they felt that there was a need, indeed, to update that assets test in some small way.

We are not fully updating it, I might say to my colleagues, but we are updating it in some way pursuant to the recommendations of the President's task force.

In the area of cars this area has not been updated since 1977, although there has been a 98-percent increase in the value of used cars over that period of time. So it has not been adjusted since 1977 and the task force, itself, I might point out, from the task force report of the President's commission, states the following and I think it is important to realize why we are dealing with assets at all:

As we have emphasized in our report, the Task Force is aware that many "new poor" households which have lost income due to unemployment in the past recession do not qualify for food stamps because they own too many assets such as autos or non-residential property. Sometimes these assets are not readily marketable, and if the household has borrowed to purchase them they may actually be a drain on the household's resources. In addition, because of the lag between application for assistance and actual enrollment in the program, households living off their assets may get precariously close to complete depletion of assets before they fall to the eligibility level and benefits begin. Therefore, we believe these households should be given greater access to the food stamp system. Raising the asset limit will help accomplish this.

We do this with regard to the personal assets limits as recommended by the task force and we do it in the bill as presented pursuant to the recommendation of the task force as well.

Now, let me state this, no one, obviously no one in this body or anyplace else supports those who abuse this program. I have heard a lot of the hypotheticals and there will be a lot of hypotheticals used on this program time and time and time again.

But neither in trying to protect the program from those who would abuse it ought we to penalize those who indeed are entitled to the benefits of this program.

That essentially is what we have tried to do in the amendment. Before I get to my amendment, let me ask the Members to look at who we are talking about, because again I know that the abuses and the hypotheticals can be used, but let me give you the statistics on who, right now, receives food stamp benefits.

Ninety-five percent of all households on food stamps have a gross income below the poverty line, 95 percent of the households on food stamps. They receive 98 percent of the benefits. So we are talking about the benefits being targeted and those who are below the proverty line, the ones that we refer to as the truly needy, the ones who need to have the safety net.

Seventy-six percent of all households own no countable assets whatsoever; 76 percent of the households on food stamps own no countable assets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. JEFFORDS and by unanimous consent, Mr. PANETTA was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

□ 1830

Mr. PANETTA. Ninety-seven percent of the households on food stamps, 97 percent, own assets of $500 or less. The average net income of someone on food stamps is $205 a month or $2,460 a year. So we are not talking about those who are not in need. This program addresses those who desperately need to have food assistance in our society. That is what the nature of this program is all about. Seventy percent of whom who are headed by a woman who receives food stamps and 20 percent of who are elderly.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

While we are on this section, I think it might be helpful to try and clear up some of these definitions.

For instance, if you own a car that is worth $5,000 and has a $5,500 lien on it, how is that considered? Is it considered as a $5,000 asset or how is it considered?

Mr. PANETTA. It is the market value of the car regardless of the equity that is owned in the car.

Mr. JEFFORDS. It is the wholesale value of the car rather than the net value.

Mr. PANETTA. $5,000.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Right. So, in other words, there is some discussion that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] had that indicated there is a freedom to trade around here and pick up automobiles.

Let me ask the gentleman this. Is this not the kind of typical person we are talking about. What occurred to me was in Springfield, VT, where we had a lot of people laid off at a plant. When I went and visited one home this is the situation I found that they had a car that was worth something around $5,000 and they had no other assets. They had gone through everything.

It is my understanding that because they had this car they then were ineligible for food stamps, even though it was liened to the hilt, in fact, they owed more to the bank than the car was worth. Because of that, is that not correct that that would prohibit that family from getting food stamps?

Mr. PANETTA. That is exactly correct. And that is the problem that we have run into time and time again, that the newly unemployed, the so-called new poor, who were working at a job suddenly found themselves laid off from a job, who had a car that they had very little equity in, suddenly found that they were not entitled to any benefits because of the value of the car. They were then faced with the decision: Should we sell the car? We have to sell the car. Get very little equity back, in order to get on food stamps.

The result is, I think, that we do need to at least understand that this provision has to provide some flexibility with regard to the value of the automobile.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield on the point that he made and the example which I think the chairman—if I might bring it to his attention—might agree with me.

Mr. JEFFORDS. If the gentleman would yield, I was in error and I will admit to that. They do have sufficient assets so that they were over $1,500 when you added the $500 of nonvalue in the car.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. No; the point of it is that they would have been eligible for food stamps under the example that the gentleman gave, having a $5,000 car, because under present law you can have $4,500 and plus $1,500. So you could drive a $6,000 car.

Mr. PANETTA. As pointed out by the gentleman, it depends on the other assets.

Mr. JEFFORDS. In that case the two added together added to more than the asset level.

Mr. PANETTA. If I might just complete the description of the amendment and then I think we can discuss the ramifications of it. It is solely because I think as a result of the hearings we have conducted across the country we found that the people who are receiving these benefits are truly those who desperately need these benefits. We are not talking about people who enjoy the prospect of getting on food stamps. Believe me. I wish I could take everyone in this House to the soup kitchens and the food pantries that we have gone to. It is not very pleasant. The people who are there do not enjoy being there. But sometimes when they need that help that is frankly what I think this country is all about.

The amendment that I am offering to the gentleman's amendment would hold the amount at the present figure, which is $4,500. We do not increase it to the $5,500 as recommended by the President's task force. We would hold the amount at $4,500. But we would allow it to increase pursuant to the CPI as the cost of used cars goes up, if they indeed do go up, with a cap of $5,500 over 3 years.

So while we do not immediately go to the $5,500 level as recommended by the President's task force, we would allow it to increase to that level, if, indeed, there is an increase in the used car value.

We think that recognizes the concerns that have been addressed here, but presents some flexibility, so that in the very least we are not harming people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has expired.

(At the request of Mr. TRAXLER and by unanimous consent, Mr. PANETTA was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GEJDENSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If we could just go through this. It seems what we are hitting here are the people who normally do not take advantage of the system, the working poor. In my district, as I was recently taking a look at a company that was closing down, American Thread, they gave us 2 years' notice and we are taking a look at what we can do for people who are presently working there, people who have worked all their lives, many of them at this facility, but at very low-paying jobs. If these people owned a car that was valued at $6,000 or $7,000, but still owed $5,000 in debt to the bank on that vehicle, the gentleman is telling me that they would be assessed as having $6,000 or $7,000 in assets.

Mr. PANETTA. That is correct.

Mr. GEJDENSON. It strikes me that we do not put an asset test on the corporate lunch. That is, we sit here in this Congress and we try to reduce the deficit and deal with the financial problems of this country. We have not done that. And that in the one instance that we may be able to help the working poor continue to be working poor rather than take away their opportunity to work, that one moment in time when the Federal Government or State assistance can help them through the kind of transition we are now facing in Willimantic, CT, where people who have worked all their lives are about to lose their jobs, not because they were not productive, but because there is less of a demand for their product and they cannot compete with foreign imports because of an overvalued dollar, the one time that those people come for assistance, that we are going to say no to them.

In some ways I was hopeful that the gentleman from California would not have to offer his amendment because what we are doing is taking and reducing what we have given some years ago. We have lost so much because of the inflated value of secondhand automobiles and that what we are doing is not giving them additional coverage, we are not even compensating for what they have lost because of the increased value of those automobiles.

So I support the gentleman's amendment because I think I recognize it gives us an opportunity to do something for the working poor, although I had hoped we would be able to do more for people who want to work for a living.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TRAXLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

In the interest of time I am not going to seek my own time. I just want to make this point.

I think the gentleman from Vermont raised an interesting question and it is the issue that I was trying to get to in my "Dear Colleague" which I sent out to my friends here in this body. The point is and here is an actual case. This is the thing that troubled me so much about the income limitation as it relates to automobiles.

Take the case—this is an actual case—and put yourself in this situation. You are talking to a constituent now. He is on the phone to you from your district. He found out that his company went bankrupt. It is a sudden layoff situation. No job. He is eligible for unemployment benefits. He has three children, two daughters in high school, one daughter in college. A very modest amount of money in his checking account. A very modest savings. And he has two snowmobiles.

Unfortunately when he got through paying for his mortgage, got through making the payment on his car which was 2 years old, when he got through making the grocery payments, utility payments—unfortunately, it was winter in our State and utility bills run for heating anywhere from, unlike the gentleman's State, $70 in the low end to $100-plus on the high end.

□ 1840

It was very difficult on his small unemployment benefit under these circumstances for him to make it. He checked with social services to see if he was eligible for food stamps. And because he had a 2-year old car, plus that small amount of money in his checking account and an additional $500 in savings, plus a snow machine or two—I do not recall what number, and he was trying to sell those, incidentally—he was not eligible for food stamps. Remember, he had been a taxpaying citizen for over 25 years. This guy was in his mid-forties. I mean, for heavens sakes, it could happen to us. Think about that one. He was in his mid-forties, never been on any kind of public assistance, always paid his taxes, always paid his own way, and he was ineligible for food stamps. At a time when he needed it most, this Government said, "Fellow, you got it too good, you got too much, and you can't have it." He was not a welfare cheat, he was not a welfare fraud, he was not on public assistance. And not that those people are. That is a great urban myth. But that is what is wrong with the Food Stamp Program. I do not know, maybe we ought to try harder, maybe we ought to figure a way in which to build up some credits in a bank, as a working, taxpaying American, and say, "If you do hit hard times, we are not going to force you to give every damn thing away to be eligible. You have been a good citizen."

And that is why I support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the Panetta amendment. Frankly, I think it is way too conservative. I think that Mr. PANETTA has bent over backward to basically keep the status quo. But it is better than the Coleman amendment because it at least allows the increase of the value of the car for cost of living. But in 1977, we said that the value of a car for the purposes of asset limitation was $4,500. It is 9 years. It is still $4,500. It has not changed. The inflation rate has clearly more than doubled.

All the Panetta amendment, basically, says is that we start today at $4,500 and we go from here and, basically, increase it for the cost of living. I think it ought to be at the committee position, $5,500.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FAZIO. I just wanted to make the point even more explicitly, the value of used cars has appreciated 98 percent since that 1977 date. It is a devastating situation to find ourselves in, as the gentleman indicates, that we cannot even take that inflation into account at the present time. We simply are going to have to, for political purposes, be more conservative than the President's Commission and begin to index from here.

So I think the gentleman makes an excellent point.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I agree with what the gentleman says. The rate of inflation on used cars has been tremendous. But given the options between us, Mr. PANETTA is clearly much more responsible than Mr. COLEMAN, and I would urge my colleagues not to be thrown off by any red herrings from Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. PANETTA's amendment keeps the asset limit at the exact same level today as it was in 1977 and in a future period of time lets it rise for a cost of living. That is a very conservative thing.

But I would just like to mention a couple of other things Mr. JEFFORDS mentioned. The asset limit of $4,500 is basically the value of the car, and it does not matter if you have got $4,500 worth of mortgage on that car, it still counts as $4,500. If you are thrown out of work and have to sell your car, most people in this country have at least 80 percent of the value of that car pledged. So you have probably less than 20 percent of an asset value left. And to keep the limit at what Mr. COLEMAN is talking about doing is all the worse, because there is no real value of the car, anyway.

Finally, Mr. COLEMAN indicates that, well, if you have cars that you use in your work, they are not counted in the asset limit. But what he fails to mention is that if you are out of work and if you need to use a car to find work, it is counted. And the fact of the matter is, if you are newly unemployed and you need to take your car, it may be a 1981 Buick or a 1980 Pontiac, out to find a job, you may be forced to sell that car in order to comply with food stamps, and then you cannot find work.

So I think for all of the reasons I have talked about, the Panetta amendment, while very conservative, is a more realistic position, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from California.

Mr. FAZIO. I appreciate the gentleman from Kansas yielding.

I think in the brief time I have been on the Select Committee on Hunger I have been exposed to something that perhaps many of you on the Agriculture Committee have known for a long time, and that is that there are an awful lot of people newly poor who have slipped through the existing social safety net that we like to talk about, people who have suddenly found themselves for the first time in their lives without any source of income or a sufficient amount of food to put on the table.

I have encountered, in talking to social service workers in Yolo County in my district, some very interesting and, frankly, poignant case studies that indicate that there are a lot of single women with children, perhaps newly divorced, or at least without some other person in the home who can bring in some income, who are in a position in which they desperately need food stamps. Often because they perhaps have a family car left over from a slightly more affluent period in the recent past, they simply cannot qualify and this is tragic. We are finding people, particularly children with a nutritional need which is obviously exceedingly important at their age, in a position of having to divest themselves of all of their assets, as the gentleman indicates, their means of transportation to potential work, if that is available at all—and in some parts of the country it is not. In fact, they are having to divest themselves of everything that they have been able to hang onto in this very difficult period simply in order to feed themselves. And I think it would be only reasonable if we today at least agree that we ought to index this automobile figure in the future, even if we cannot go back and remedy the effect of past inflation.

So I want to support the Panetta substitute and the gentleman from Kansas in his position on it.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Panetta amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to put in perspective some of what has been said earlier today in that this amendment impacts on a very small percentage of those who receive or will apply for food stamps. By and large, what we are trying to do, the gentleman from California and the members of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri—and by the way, let me state that we have a good, viable working food stamp program. If there are errors, it is human error. I think that the gentleman from Missouri, the author of the original amendment that we are working with here, has made a good and valuable contribution to a working, viable food stamp program. But in 1984 we find ourselves with new circumstances and a new economic situation that has put a new type of food stamp applicant and/or recipient. Food stamps used to be out in the rural areas and the small towns and in the very inner city. We now have, because of the economic situation in this country, regretfully, brought in a new clientele, if you would, for the Food Stamp Program. And these are what our distinguished colleague from Michigan mentioned about, these are hard-working people who have earned fairly good amounts of money, but inflation, and what have you, have taken all that they have earned to live. But one of the things that an American family aspires for is a vehicle to move his family. This is one of the areas of emotional—not that it has been mentioned here, I want to clarify that—but this has been an emotional negative aspect of the Food Stamp Program, that you came in a Cadillac. In my area, the Cadillac grew into a Rolls Royce or a Mercedes. This has cast a negative impact on the Food Stamp Program. But we know that it is 4,500. We are trying to bring it to 5,500.

I address this to my colleagues from the suburban areas of the larger cities of the Midwest, the Upper Midwest and Northeast, that this is addressed to those who are being laid off from the factories, from the manufacturing areas, for whatever reason the factory closed. You have people who are put into a situation that they cannot control themselves, and yet I would say that most of these people, the last thing they would want to do is apply for food stamps. But there comes a time when they have to succumb to reality, and they apply. And there hangs out what the average American yearns for, that he went and bought a good car, a nice car, a $7,500 car, $8,000. And if you just look at the television, it does not buy too terribly much. But I have had a situation in my congressional district, with the terrible freeze that we just had this past December and early January, that hard-working people who had paid in income taxes to the Federal Government a lot more than they would ever get in 6 months or 8 months or 10 months of food stamps, who ask the question, "I paid my taxes, I worked diligently, but now I have this need, and why can't you help me?"

It is regretful that most of the time you would have to point to that car. Mind you, $5,500 does not buy much of a car. And the equity is not all that terribly much.

I know that the gentleman from Missouri mentioned the fact that we could save, yes, several million dollars, and that is good. I want to do that. But there should be other areas, because if you do not do this, you are on the verge of discriminating—you will, anyway—for someone who has a car beyond $7,500. But below $7,500 you would be discriminating against someone who through no fault of their own except our economic crisis, our economic situation, find themselves in this regretful situation that they have to apply for food stamps.

So I would want my colleagues who have never been bothered with the use of food stamps that it is perhaps time that they would look at what the committee has done in a positive and responsible way.

□ 1850

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DE LA GARZA was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Look at what the committee has done diligently. All of them, including the two gentlemen from Missouri, everyone on the committee has worked diligently. This is just a difference of philosophy. It is not an actual difference of anything else. But let me assure the members, when you talk about fraud, when you talk about abuse, this committee has done everything humanly possible. I would say categorically that if a person is getting food stamps that is not deserving of them, only two things happen: Either there was human error, or a deliberate impropriety; the person did not tell the truth. Only those two. Otherwise, we have got it so tight that we are even keeping people from getting food stamps as they need them, and in this case it would be people who have worked diligently and through no fault of their own find themselves in circumstances where they have to apply for food stamps.

I would hope that the members would support the compromise substitute by Mr. PANETTA.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Panetta amendment.

Mr. Chairman, let me respond, first of all, to a couple of comments that were made. First of all, Mr. PANETTA pointed out that we have not increased the asset limitation since 1971. I join with him in raising it from $1,500 to $2,250; that is in my amendment, and that does not change.

The place we differ, and the only place we differ in this and what this vote stands for that we are going to vote on is whether or not we are going to increase the car limitation from $4,500 to $5,500. Now, the chairman pointed out that the Food Stamp Program is serving the needy; if that is the case, and I certainly hope that is the case, then we ought not be worried about $7,000 cars being driven by these needy people.

If, in fact, what he has told us is true, they should not be driving $7,000 cars to the welfare office. Now, how onerous, the gentleman from Kansas, my friend from Kansas, says that the Coleman amendment is onerous. The Coleman amendment simply restates the present law. The present law allows people to come in with practically new cars as it is. A 1983 Chevrolet Chevette would still qualify under my amendment. A 1982 Chrysler Le Baron, valued at $6,000, would still be eligible. So I do not think it is onerous.

We hear a lot about the working poor, and I certainly try to be compassionate and have been a supporter of the Food Stamp Program, but I would like to talk about the working taxpayer. The working taxpayer who is driving a 1977 or 1976 automobile valued at probably less than $2,000, he and she, Mr. Taxpayer of America, are paying the bill for the multibillion-dollar food stamp recipients. I suggest that we also show compassion toward the taxpayers.

Here is a way that we can save $150 million over 3 years or $300 million over 5 years. It is certainly not a step in the wrong direction in which the Panetta amendment takes us. I want to point out to my colleagues so that nobody can say, when they are asked by a constituent, what you voted on here. If you vote for the Panetta amendment, you are voting for allowing, within 1 year, eligibility by food stamp recipients to own a 1982 Cadillac Cimarron; a 1983 Chevrolet Malibu; a 1983 Chrysler Le Baron; a 1983 Ford LTD; a 1983 Mercury Marquis; or a 1979 Porsche.

In a couple of years, you will have allowed people to come in with Ford Thunderbirds, 1983 Oldsmobile Cutlass Supremes, et cetera, et cetera, because the amendment becomes more liberal and more generous. Now, you can have, under my amendment, a $4,500 car plus $2,250, either in the value of a car or in the bank or some other asset that is not excluded. So you could, conceivably, have a car worth $7,250. That is generous enough. We should not go the increased step that Mr. PANETTA wants to take us, and I think we ought to recognize that what we are voting on here is that if you vote for Panetta, you are voting against the Coleman amendment, and you are voting for bigger, more expensive cars for food stamp beneficiaries.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. Is it my understanding that if a family owned, let us say a 1981 Ford Escort that they use for transportation to go to a training school; they owned a 1982 Chevette that they drove to work, and they owned a 1981 Dodge Omni, all of which were valued under $4,500, that they would still be eligible for food stamps, even in that kind of a scenario?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. They are eligible for food stamps today; they would be eligible under the Coleman amendment. So nobody is going to get cut away with these new cars. That is why I am saying it is so generous now it is almost embarassing to stand up and try to hold the line at 1982 cars.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield further, so, in other words, you could have literally a three-car family, owning cars from 1981 to 1982 that are considered by many working families of this country their one car, and they would still be eligible for food stamps, and what the Panetta amendment would do, is ultimately make food stamp recipients eligible to own cars like a 1979 Cadillac Fleetwood Limousine; a 1980 Cadillac DeVille; a 1980 Lincoln Versailles; a 1979 BMW; a 1978 Jaguar. That is what we are talking about here is the difference between what a working family has to drive, and what a food stamp recipient could be driving under the Panetta amendment; is that correct?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. That is the way that I see it, and very frankly, I think that we are generous enough under the present food stamp eligibility. I could have come up here with an amendment to cut it back, because nobody has upgraded the average taxpayers' car.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, obviously, there is a considerable amount of confusion at this point, and I hope that perhaps the chairman of the subcommittee will yield and try and straighten out some of my questions.

I have been dealing with this issue a long time, but I must say I am quite confused now. It is my understanding, and please correct me if I am wrong, that if the gentleman's amendment passes, at this moment in time there will be no difference between the gentleman's situation and the Coleman situation and present law; is that correct?

I yield to the gentleman for his response.

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman is absolutely correct. If Mr. COLEMAN supports $4,500 which is the present limit, and that is exactly what we would hold to at this time.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Now, I am also confused on all these values, but in my understanding of economics, as rudimentary as it may be, is that the CPI kind of tries to keep things equal, sort of the same real value, so that if you take and put the CPI on to something, it sort of tries to take it back to where it was when we started.

It is my understanding that all the gentleman's amendment does is to look to the future and says, well, if Mr. COLEMAN is right, and $4,500 is the kind of area that we ought to have as the value of a car, well, let us kind of keep it there for the future. We recognize it is good now, so why do we not keep it the same for the future.

Is that basically what the gentleman's amendment does?

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman is correct. We are trying to hold that value at constant dollars. If we agree that $4,500 ought to be the level, then we ought to at least agree that it ought to be that level in constant dollars.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Now, for the savings that he talks about, I think he is talking, as I understand it, relative to the bill and not the gentleman's amendment; is that correct? In fact, for the first year the savings on your two would be about the same; is that correct?

Mr. PANETTA. That is correct. At the $4,500 level.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Right.

Mr. PANETTA. If in fact it were increased, then it would be reflected in the amount of savings.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. That is an important point. The gentleman's amendment changes things in April 1985. No, they are not changed tomorrow; there is no difference in our amendment until April 1985; then the savings change. I think the chairman would want to reflect that.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I think that is correct.

□ 1900

Mr. PANETTA. I think the difference would be little if, in fact, there is a difference. It is dependent on whether there is an increase in the value of used cars according to the CPI. If there is not any change in the CPI, then that number would remain constant and the savings would be the same. If there is a difference, then the estimate we have is that the difference is between $11 million under the gentleman's amendment and $6 million under mine.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Thus, what the gentleman is trying to do, as I understand it, you are going back from what the bill has, $5,500 for a car, back to $4,500 for a car, and saying that if they are all right, these Members who are opposing the bill level, that $4,500 is the correct level, then we ought to keep it at the correct level for the future, until such time as we may modify it.

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman is exactly correct. I think we ought to hold that level. If we agree that $4,500 is the level, then we ought to hold it to that, and I think that is the general feeling here. We ought to at least hold it at constant dollars so it does reflect the situation in the economy.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Frankly, I prefer to see us stay at the bill level. That, compared to what the President's commission asked for, is quite modest. They would practically double it. I think that was very modest, and certainly it is hard for me to see how even the strongest opponents of raising it at all can disagree with just holding it at some real level so that as we go forward we do not knock more and more eligible working poor off the system.

Mr. PANETTA. If the gentleman will yield further, in addition to that, Members should know that there is a cap of $5,500, so that over 3 years, regardless of where that rate of inflation is, it cannot exceed the cap of $5,500 that was established by the President's task force.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I see. So you even have a cap on it, even with the modest thing you have done.

Mr. PANETTA. That is correct.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I understand. It seems to me that is a very, very reasonable amendment relative to the complaints that have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. JEFFORDS

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JEFFORDS: Page 27, strike out line 17 and all that follows through line 7 on page 28, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) If a State agency's payment error rate for any fiscal year exceeds 5 per centum, the State agency shall, other than for good cause shown, be liable to the Secretary in an amount equal to the difference between—

"(A) the product of—

"(i) the per centum by which State agency's payment error rate for the fiscal year exceeds 5 per centum; and

"(ii) the total value of all coupons issued by the State agency for the fiscal year; and

"(B) the amount of the payment error improvement determined under paragraph (3) for the fiscal year.

Upon the assertion of a claim by the Secretary in the amount determined to be payable under this paragraph, the Secretary shall recover such amount through withholding from amounts otherwise payable to the State agency under this Act and, if such amounts are not adequate to satisfy the claim in full, the State agency shall pay to the Secretary the balance of any amount remaining due. The State agency may seek administrative and judicial review under section 14 of this Act of any claim or determination made by the Secretary under this paragraph.

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (2)(B), the amount of the payment error improvement for the fiscal year referred to in such paragraph shall be equal to the product of—

"(A) the amount determined under paragraph (2)(A) of this section for such fiscal year; and

"(B) the per centum representing the ratio which (i) the positive difference (if any) between the payment error rate for the preceding fiscal year and the payment error rate for the fiscal year referred to in such paragraph bears to (ii) the difference between the payment error rate for such preceding fiscal year and 5 per centum; rounded down to the nearest multiple 10 per centum or to zero, whichever is nearer. If the payment error rate for the fiscal year referred in such paragraph exceeds the payment error rate for the preceding fiscal year, then the amount of the payment error improvement for the fiscal year referred to in such paragraph shall be equal to zero.".

Mr. JEFFORDS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is fairly easy to explain. If a State makes progress in reducing its error rate, its sanction would be slightly reduced from what it would be under the provisions of this bill. Even with my amendment, States will be saddled with greater penalties than they are under current law. In no way does it let them off the hook. But it does provide a carrot, an additional incentive for bringing down their error rates.

Specifically, my amendment would reduce a State's sanction by 10 percent for every 10 percent of progress it makes toward the target error rate of 5 percent. If a State does nothing to improve its error rate, it gets nothing under my amendment. And even if a State does an average job of bringing its error rate down, it will not trigger the 10-percent minimum in the amendment. Only those States that make an extraordinary effort will be rewarded, as I think they should be.

Our concern for needy Americans, as reflected in this bill and our work in general, focuses correctly on the adequate level of benefits. Seldom do we pay much attention to the administration of programs such as food stamps. It's more technical, it's not our area of expertise, it's tedious.

With little notice and an equal amount of comment, H.R. 5151 has made a major, indeed radical, change in the administration of the Food Stamp Program. This change may cost the States as much as $350 million in fiscal year 1987. This is a cost shift, not a cost saving.

Under current law, the States must reduce their error rates to 5 percent or face a sanction based on a percentage of their administrative funding. Under this bill, that sanction will be on a dollar-for-dollar basis for every error above 5 percent. In other words, if a State issues $200 million in benefits per year and has an error rate of 7 percent, its penalty would be $4 million.

Four million dollars is not a lot of money in our deliberations. But to a State legislature or food stamp administrator, it's an enormous sum to have to fork over to the Federal Government. And for what purpose? Under current law, the States are already making substantial progress in reducing their error rates. Beating them over the head harder is not likely to make much difference in their performance. But it will make a difference in their pocketbook.

As I said, $4 million is not much money. By coincidence, that figure is the price tag of my amendment as estimated by the Department of Agriculture. To be accurate, this estimate is highly sensitive to error rate reductions, the predicting of which is at best guesswork.

My point is, that for this small investment, we can give a signal to the States that we are not unmindful of the difficulties they face, and that when we are interested in cooperation rather than confrontation. Studies are fine, and I am pleased that we are going to give more attention to this issue in the coming year prior to the 1985 farm bill. But I want to be sure that we do not ignore this issue here and now. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PANETTA AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. JEFFORDS

Mr. PANETTA. Mr Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PANETTA as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. JEFFORDS: On page 27, insert after "year" in line 23 the following: ", less any amounts that are recovered or collected by the State agency during the fiscal year under the provisions of this Act for allotments issued to ineligible households or overissued to eligible households and that are not retained by the State agency in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a)".

Mr. PANETTA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, the situation is as explained by the gentleman from Vermont. I share his concern with regards to the sanctions area and the need to provide incentives to the States. What my substitute would do, essentially, is allow the States in the collection of their overpayments to credit those overpayments versus the penalty that would be imposed by the sanctions included in the legislation.

I think this is a fair way to deal with the States.

I have discussed this with the gentleman from Missouri, and I think this approach is more acceptable in terms of the subcommittee.

Under H.R. 5151, States would be liable to the Federal Government dollar for dollar for the value of food stamp payments made in error in excess of 5 percent, effective in fiscal year 1986. However, since States already recover overpayments and payments to ineligibles and return a portion of their recoveries to the Federal Government, the dollar-for-dollar sanction results in a double recovery by the Federal Government.

Effective in fiscal year 1986, the Panetta amendment would allow States to credit against the error rate sanctions they owe the Federal Government the amount of overpayment collections they have returned to the Federal Government in a given fiscal year. So, for instance, if a State returns $100,000 in claims collections to the Federal Government in fiscal year 1986 and its error rate sanction level for performance in fiscal year 1986 is $2 million, it would owe the Federal Government $1.9 million.

This amendment would not only correct an inequity in assessing sanctions against the States but would also encourage them to increase their claims collections activities. There would be a large fiscal incentive for the States to beef up the staffs that seek to recover fraud and nonfraud claims.

Since States already retain a portion of claims they collect—50 percent of frauds claims, 25 percent of nonfraud claims, they would receive credit against their error rate liability for only the portion of claims collected that is actually passed on to the Federal Government. The States would receive credit for collections that are achieved through a reduction in benefits for continuing participants, cash repayments, or those received by any other legal means.

In determining the offset for which a State qualifies, the Department of Agriculture would ascertain the amount of claims returned by a State to the Federal Government in a given fiscal year, say fiscal year 1986, even if the claims were not established in that year. The amount of claims received by the Federal Government for that year would be credited against whatever error rate sanctions, if any, the State owes for performance in that particular year, which in this case would be fiscal year 1986. Since sanctions for fiscal year 1986 would not be assessed until fiscal year 1987, it is in that year that the offset would have effect.

The Panetta substitute amendment would have no cost in fiscal year 1985 and fiscal year 1986. The preliminary CBO estimate of cost for fiscal year 1987 is $15 million.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

The amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MORRISON OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut: Page 8, line 5, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof "; and".

Page, after line 5, insert the following:

"(3) in the eighth sentence, by striking out '$35 a month' and inserting in lieu thereof 'the lesser of $35 a month or 5 per centum of monthly household income after any exclusions and before any deductions provided for in this section' ".

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from Texas, Mr. de la Garza, and the gentleman from California (Mr. PANETTA) and the entire Committee on Agriculture for developing the Hunger Relief Act of 1984. It is vitally important that we begin to restore and extend the food stamp program, the main safeguard against hunger in America.

While we are improving the Food Stamp Act, it is appropriate that we pay special attention to the elderly and disabled, among the most vulnerable of food stamp recipients. The circumstances and needs of older Americans and the disabled differ in some respects from those of other recipients. We should tailor the food stamp program to reflect these differences to assure fair and adequate treatment for all served. The amendment I am offering to H.R. 5151 makes one such special adjustment.

My amendment will make a minor change in current law and this change will cost the Federal Government very little. Making a small adjustment here today, though, will telescope major improvements into the lives of low income elderly and disabled people around the country.

Few people realize that the food stamp program is by far the country's largest elderly nutrition program. Every day, millions of older Americans rely on food stamps to pay their grocery bills. Twice as much funding goes to food stamps for households with elderly members than to the congregate and home-delivered meals programs combined. And 20 percent of all food stamp households have at least one elderly member.

The program is similarly important to the disabled.

Specifically, my amendment would change the formula for calculating the excess medical expense deduction. As you know, excess medical expenses are only taken into account for determining eligibility and benefits for elderly and disabled recipients.

Under current law, a recipient must be able to document more than $35 a month in medical expenses before any medical expenses are deducted. Then only the amount over $35 is deductible, not the initial $35.

To require elderly and disabled recipients to pay the first $35 in monthly medical expenses before beginning to calculate their medical deduction is an unfair burden. The mean gross income for households which include an elderly or disabled member and which receive food stamps is $300 per month. So $35 is 12 percent of the gross household income.

Affluent Americans who itemize deductions when calculating their income tax pay only 5 percent of their gross income for medical expenses before the remainder becomes deductible. Amounts over 5 percent of gross income are considered extraordinary medical expenses. Should the rules be tougher for elderly and disabled food stamp recipients, some of the least fortunate people in the country?

And the $35 threshold is flawed in another way too. A flat figure deduction of this type is regressive. It requires a greater sacrifice from people with fewer resources. This punitive treatment should be avoided where possible.

I propose that the House adopt a formula for food stamp recipients similar to that used in the Federal income tax system. Medical expenses beyond 5 percent of gross household income, or expenses beyond the $35, whichever is less, would be allowed as deductions. Gross income is the level of income after exclusions have been figured.

The effect of this provision for the average recipient will be to make all expenses over $15 deductible for determining food stamp eligibility and benefits. This is approximately the amount paid by these individuals for part B medicare coverage. Their out-of-pocket costs for medical care over and above medicare will be deductible. The threshold for higher income recipients will be higher, and for lower income recipients will be lower.

The "whichever is less" language protects elderly and disabled recipients who live in households where the monthly gross income exceeds $700. Although 68 percent of elderly recipients are single-member households, 10,000 elderly recipients live in households of eight or more people. In such a case, we can hope that monthly gross income for the group will exceed $700. And only 13 percent of food stamp households have monthly gross income exceeding $600.

Medical expenses plague the elderly and disabled. Although most elderly and some disabled people are eligible for medicare, and many food stamp recipients qualify for medicaid, big gaps remain. My amendment would provide a measure of relief in an area where it is sorely needed.

Even if a person qualifies for medicaid, the coverage she or he will receive varies from State to State. Within limits, States decide what their medicaid programs will provide. For example, States are not required to pay for drugs, dental work, eyeglasses, or medical supplies. Medicaid plans in 21 States fail to cover dental expenses and two States pay for no drugs whatsoever. The low-income elderly and disabled must pay for the rest out-of-pocket, or go without.

Going without is the rule. Even though the need for additional medical supplies and services is great, most poor people have few if any dollars to spend each month on medical expenses.

Given this, it is clear that the $35 threshold is unrealistically high. It is so out of line, in fact, that only 150,000 of the 1.5 million participating households with elderly members successfully claimed a medical deduction in 1982. Only 10,000 of the 500,000 households with disabled members were able to do so.

Changing the threshold to 5 percent of gross monthly income, or $35, brings the medical deduction into reach of more recipients. It then begins to act as it was designed to, to bring some relief to low-income elderly and disabled recipients for their burdensome medical expenses.

My amendment will help some of the least fortunate and most vulnerable people in the country. It will end the embarrassment of imposing a much stricter standard on elderly and disabled food stamp recipients than we do on the well off who itemize tax deductions.

I urge your support for my amendment.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this with the gentleman. I think he has identified an area of growing concern, obviously, involving health costs related to senior citizens. While we did not deal specifically with this particular area in the hearings or in our markup, we think there is sufficient concern involved here to consider it for purposes of the conference, and for that reason I would have no objection to this amendment.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman from California.

Mr. Chairman, I would add that I had published in the RECORD a number of amendments addressed to the special problems of the elderly and disabled on the food stamp program. I understand from the gentleman from California that he would be willing to look into this area in the next session of Congress, and I plan to offer only this of my amendments, and I appreciate his support in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WALKER

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALKER: Page 29, after line 8, insert the following:

OPTIONAL BLOCK GRANTS

SEC. 115. (a) The Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2011 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"STATE BLOCK GRANT OPTION

"SEC. 21. (a) As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

"(1) 'Attorney General' means the Attorney General of the United States.

"(2) 'Block grant State' means a State which is operating a low-income nutritional assistance program in accordance with this section.

"(3) 'Comptroller General' means the Comptroller General of the United States.

"(4) 'State' means the fifty States, the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.

"(b)(1) A State may elect—

"(A) to operate a low-income nutritional assistance block grant program to finance expenditures for food assistance for needy persons within the State in accordance with this section, or

"(B) to have the Secretary operate the food stamp program within the State in accordance with sections 2 through 18 and section 20.

"(2) If a State elects to operate a low-income nutritional assistance block grant program pursuant to paragraph (1)(A), the State shall give notice to the Secretary of such election at least thirty days before the beginning of the first fiscal year it elects to operate the program.

"(3) The Secretary shall make grants to block grant States in accordance with this section.

"(4) The Secretary shall retain each fiscal year, out of funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained in section 18(a)(1) for such fiscal year (other than the amount apportioned pursuant to section 19(a)), an amount which bears the same ratio to the total amount appropriated pursuant to such authorization as the amounts received by and benefits distributed in block grant States for the period beginning April 1, 1983, and ending March 31, 1984, under this Act and section 8 of the Act of December 31, 1973 (Public Law 93-233; 42 U.S.C. 1382e note), bears to the total amount received by all States for such period under this Act and such section.

"(C)(1)(A) The Secretary shall allot to each block grant State in each fiscal year, out of funds retained under subsection (b)(4) for such fiscal year, an amount which bears the same ratio to the total amount of funds retained under such subsection as the amount received by any benefits distributed in such block grant State for the period beginning April 1, 1983, and ending March 31, 1984, under this Act and section 8 of the Act of December 31, 1973 (Public Law 93-233; 42 U.S.C. 1382e note), bears to the total amount received by all such block grant States for such period under this Act and such section.

"(B) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), no block grant State may receive for any fiscal year an amount less than one-quarter of 1 per centum of the amount appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained in section 18(a)(1) for such fiscal year which remains after the apportionment required by section 19(a). If one or more block grant States receive minimum allotments by virtue of this subparagraph, the total amount of funds available to other States shall be reduced by the total amount of allotments received by viture of this subparagraph.

"(2)(A) If, with respect to any block grant State, the Secretary—

"(i) receives a request from the governing body of an Indian tribe or tribal organization within the block grant State that assistance under this section be made directly to the tribe or organizaton; and

"(ii) determines that the members of the tribe or tribal organization would be better served if grants to provide benefits under this section were made directly to such tribe or organization, the Secretary shall reserve, from amounts which would otherwise be allotted to the block grant State under this section for the fiscal year, the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

"(B) The Secretary shall reserve for the purpose of subparagraph (A) from sums that would otherwise be allotted to the block grant State an amount which bears the same ratio to the block grant State's allotment for the fiscal year involved as the population of all eligible Indians for whom a determination has been made under this paragraph bears to the population of all individuals eligible for assistance under this section in the block grant State.

"(C) The sums reserved by the Secretary under this paragraph shall be granted to Indian tribes and tribal organizations on the basis of the relative number of individuals contained in the Indian tribes and tribal organizations for whom a determination has been made under this paragraph.

"(D) To be eligible for a grant under this paragraph in any fiscal year, an Indian tribe or tribal organization must submit to the Secretary a plan for the fiscal year which meets such criteria as the Secretary may prescribe by regulation.

"(d)(1) To be eligible for a grant under this section in any fiscal year, a block grant State must submit an application to the Secretary for the fiscal year. Each application shall be submitted at such time and in such form as the Secretary shall require.

"(2) No funds may be allotted to a block grant State for any fiscal year after the fiscal year in which such block grant State received funds under this section unless the legislature of the block grant State conducts public hearings, not less often than biennially, on the proposed use and distribution of funds to be provided under this section.

"(3) As part of the application required by paragraph (1), the chief executive officer of each block grant State shall certify in writing that the block grant State will—

"(A) assess on a regular basis the food and nutrition needs of needy persons residing in the block grant State;

"(B) use the funds made available to it under this section to raise the level of nutrition among low-income households residing in that block grant State;

"(C) designate a single agency which shall be responsible for the administration, or supervision of the administration, of the program for which funds made available under this section are used;

"(D) provide that fiscal control and fund accounting procedures will be established to insure the proper disbursal of and accounting for Federal funds paid to the block grant State under this section, including procedures for monitoring the program carried out by the block grant State with the assistance provided under this section;

"(E) provide for an audit (pursuant to paragraph (8)), not less often than biennially, of the block grant State's expenditures of amounts received under this section;

"(F) describe how the block grant State program will operate to carry out this paragraph, including a description of the assistance to be provided under the program, the recipients who will be eligible under the program, and the administering agency; and

"(G) comply with all the requirements of this paragraph and the public hearing requirement of paragraph (2).

"(4) The Secretary may not prescribe the manner in which the block grant States comply with paragraph (3). Each block grant State may prescribe, and the Secretary may not limit, standards of or requirements for eligibility for benefits under this section. Such standards or requirements may include a requirement for work or household contributions, or both, as a condition of eligibility for benefits under this section.

"(5) A grant made under this section may not be used by the block grant State, or by any person with whom the block grant State makes arrangements to carry out this section, for the purchase or improvement of land, or the purchase, construction, or permanent improvement of a building or other facility.

"(6)(A) The chief executive officer of each block grant State shall prepare and furnish to the Secretary a plan which describes how the block grant State will implement the assurances specified in paragraph (3). The chief executive officer of each block grant State may revise a plan prepared under this subparagraph and shall furnish a copy of the revised plan to the Secretary before its implementation.

"(B) A plan, including any revision of a plan, prepared under subparagraph (A) shall be made available for public inspection within the block grant State in a manner that will facilitate the review of, and comment on, the plan.

"(C) An Indian tribe or tribal organization which receives a grant under subsection (c)(2) shall not be a part of the plan submitted under this paragraph.

"(7) The Secretary may, upon a block grant State's request, provide technical assistance with respect to programs for the provision of assistance under this section, including technical assistance for the purpose of determining the feasibility of specific block grant plans under consideration by the block grant State.

"(8) Each block grant State shall provide for an annual audit of the funds provided to such block grant State under this section and shall have such audit conducted by an entity independent of the agency administering activities or services under this section. The audit shall be conducted in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles. Within thirty days after the completion of the audit, the chief executive officer of the block grant State shall submit a copy of the audit to the legislature of the block grant State and the Secretary.

"(9) The Comptroller General shall from time to time evaluate expenditures by block grant States of grants made under this section in order to insure that expenditures are consistent with this section and to determine the effectiveness of the block grant State in accomplishing the purposes of this section.

"(e)(1) No person may on the ground of race, color, national origin, or sex be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under, a program or activity funded with funds made available under this section. Any prohibition against discrimination on the basis of age under the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.) or with respect to an otherwise qualified handicapped individual as provided in section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794) shall also apply to such a program or activity.

"(2) Whenever the Secretary determines that there has been a failure to comply with paragraph (1) or any applicable regulation pertaining to paragraph (1), the Secretary shall notify the chief executive officer of the block grant State and request the chief executive officer to secure compliance. If within a reasonable period of time, not to exceed sixty days, the chief executive officer fails or refuses to secure compliance, the Secretary may—

"(A) refer the matter to the Attorney General with a recommendation that an appropriate civil action be instituted;

"(B) exercise the powers and functions provided under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq.), the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.), or section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794), as may be applicable; or

"(C) take such other action as may be provided by law.

"(3) When a matter is referred to the Attorney General pursuant to paragraph (2)(A), or whenever the Attorney General has reason to believe there has occurred a pattern or practice in violation of this subsection, the Attorney General may bring a civil action in an appropriate United States district court for such relief as may be appropriate, including injunctive relief.

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall pay each block grant State the total allotment of funds for a fiscal year to which the block grant State is entitled under subsection (c) immediately after the Secretary has determined the amount of such allotment.

"(2) Payments made to a block grant State under this section for an fiscal year may be expended by the block grant State only in such fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

"(3) Any funds paid to a block grant State under subsection (c) which are not expended by the block grant State in the fiscal year for which they are paid or in the succeeding fiscal year may be expended by the block grant State on other social services provided pursuant to Federal law. The block grant State shall inform the Secretary of all such funds expended on other social services. If the block grant State elects not to expend all or part of the funds on other social services, the unexpended funds shall be returned to the Secretary and added to the amount made available for allotment to all the block grant States under subsection (b)(4) for the following fiscal year.

"(g)(1)(A)(i) A block grant State shall repay to the United States any amounts not expended other than in accordance with this section.

"(ii) The Secretary shall (in the absence of repayment by the block grant State under clause (i)) offset the amounts against any other amount to which the block grant State is or may become entitled under this section.

"(B)(i) The Secretary shall respond in an expeditious and speedy manner to complaints of a substantial or serious nature that a block grant State has failed to use funds in accordance with this section or an assurance made under subsection (d)(3).

"(ii) The Secretary, after adequate notice and an opportunity for a hearing conducted within the affected block grant State, shall withhold funds from a block grant State which fails to utilize its allotment substantially in accordance with this section or fails to meet an assurance made on behalf of the block grant State under subsection (d)(3).

"(C) Any funds repaid, offset, or withheld under this paragraph in any fiscal year shall be added to the amount made available for allotment to all the block grant States under subsection (b)(4) for the following fiscal year.

"(2) The Comptroller General may conduct investigations of the use of funds received under this section by a block grant State in order to insure compliance with this section.

"(3)(A) In connection with an investigation conducted under this subsection, a block grant State shall make appropriate books, documents, papers, and records available to the Secretary and the Comptroller General, upon a reasonable request, for examination, copying, or mechanical reproduction on or off the premises of the entity concerned.

"(B) The Secretary and the Comptroller General may not request information not readily available to a block grant State or require that information be compiled, collected, or transmitted in a form not already available.

"(h) Whoever knowingly and willfully embezzles, misapplies, steals, or obtains by fraud, false statement, or forgery, any funds, assets, or property provided or financed under this section shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both. If the value of the funds, assets, or property involved is not over $200, the penalty shall be a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"(i)(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Comptroller General, shall evaluate possible alternate formulas for the allotment of funds to block grant States under subsection (c). The formulas shall provide for the equitable distribution of the funds to block grant States and take into account the population, number of low-income households, financial resources, levels of unemployment, and such other factors within the block grant States which the Secretary deems appropriate.

"(2) The Secretary shall report to the Congress on the evaluation conducted pursuant to paragraph (1) no later than one year after the date of enactment of the Food Stamp Optional Block Grant Act of 1983.".

(b) Section 3 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2012) is amended by striking out "As" in the matter preceding subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in section 21(a), as".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective on October 1, 1986.

Page 29, line 10, strike out "SEC. 115." and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 116.".

Mr. WALKER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. I there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, this is a rather substantive amendment. It is an amendment which I recognized we probably are not going to adopt here this evening, so therefore I intend to try to keep my remarks brief. But I do think something we need to understand it is one way of proceeding if we really are going to get this program under control and assure that people who need nutritional help really get that help, namely, getting it at the local level.

What my amendment would do is take the Food Stamp Program and convert it into a block grant program. The President's task force that we have heard a lot about on the floor today recommended that we move in that direction. As a matter of fact, that was their chief recommendation. We have heard an awful lot about the recommendations that they made here during the course of debate, but what we have not heard is the fact that the committee has decided to ignore the chief recommendation of the President's task force, that being that we go to a block grant type of approach.

The task force's recommendation was:

Allow States the option of establishing autonomous food assistance programs.

They said:

We have become convinced that people in need of food assistance would benefit if the program or any subset of them were controlled at a more local level, such as the State or county.

The gains in such a modification derive from the following states:

(1) More autonomy in allocating funds among the various food assistance programs;

(2) Greater discretion in administering programs; and

(3) Greater responsibility for assuring that funds are properly targeted toward those in greatest need.

The greater flexibility and improved administration that would be gained would help to increase the benefits available to the truly needy without at the same time increasing the cost to the taxpayer.

The administration contends that this is still the direction that they would like to go. In a letter to me from the U.S. Department of Agriculture they said:

A block grant option would permit any State to design a program to meet the special needs of its people. A State could continue its participation in current Federal programs if it believes its population would best be served by doing so. This flexibility would improve rather than weaken the system of the food assistance programs by giving State officials who are closer to their constituencies a greater role in structuring methods to provide assistance. Greater State autonomy, coupled with greater State responsibility for administration, could lead to program innovations that result in more effective service to those in need.

In other words, what I propose to do is give the States the option of taking the money for their nutritional services in a block grant, which would then give them the autonomy to administer the programs I think in a far more effective way.

I would suggest that this is an option that does not cut funding whatsoever. As a matter of fact, there is no cut in funding here. What it does is simply assures us that at some point in the future we may be able to stop the rapid climb in funding of this program because we would be meeting the needs in a more effective manner.

Block grants work. I recently did a survey in my district of what happened after we put block grants into effect in education in 1981. We were told at that time that there would be a problem with regard to funding getting the local school districts under the block grant approach. It has been the experience in at least my congressional district that the block grants resulted in 162 percent increase in the programs that were previously covered in the block grant programs.

□ 1950

The increases ranged from a low of 76 percent to a high of 596 percent in the school districts in my area. Not one school district received less money; all school districts got more money. In other words, block grants can deliver the money to local areas. It delivers the money to local areas in a very, very efficient manner, and assures that you get more bang for your bucks in terms of getting the people with the needs served by the money.

I would suggest that as we move toward the future that there are options available to us. There are block grant options that assure fair funding but do so in a way that assure that we have the kind of administration that cuts down on the waste, fraud and abuse that have been all too characteristic of this program.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman. I rise in reluctant opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. His amendment authorizes optional block grants for the Food Stamp Program—a proposition that I find attractive and worthy of some in-depth study and hearings.

Just as the opponents of my amendment to require monthly reporting and retrospective budgeting wished to allow States to choose the best method—Mr. Walker also wishes to allow States to design the best possible food stamp program for the needy within each State. However, I believe much more information is needed and public hearings held before this body takes action on a matter so controversial as optional block grants for the Food Stamp Program.

For example, I have several questions which remain unanswered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania's amendment.

First, is it apprpriate to adjust the block grant to reflect changes in the cost of food and the number of people in need? If so, what method should be used?

Second, what formula should be used to distribute food stamp funds to States?

Third, should there be any restrictions placed on how States design food stamp programs or how benefits are delivered—cash versus coupons?

Fourth, what Federal review and what penalty for misuse of funds should be a part of any optional block grant, if any?

Fifth, what level of government is the most appropriate to design and administer programs aimed at helping the needy?

There are many more questions left unanswered by the gentleman's amendment. These are questions for which I intend to request a forum for response. I believe it is important that the Agriculture Committee hold full and complete hearings on this subject. Many Members have already made up their minds on this topic and do not care to explore the ramifications of optional block grants. I have not—although I do find the optional block grant proposal appealing. However, until I am able to answer the questions I and others have raised, I cannot support this measure. It is my hope that the chairman of the subcommittee with jurisdiction over the food stamp program will hold full hearings on this subject before reauthorization of the food stamp program—scheduled for next year's farm bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. Without taking the time of the House, let me assure the gentleman that there are detailed answers within the proposal for all of the questions that he raised, and I would be glad to review those with him.

I would simply say to the gentleman that I agree with him that it would be worthwhile to move ahead and look at this in more detail, but I would also remind the gentleman that I first offered a block grant for food stamps back in 1980, so that we have had 4 years to look into this proposal, and I am sorry to say that not very much work has been done in that direction, beyond the President's task force, who, after they did look at it in some detail, decided that that is the direction that we ought to move.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I join in the gentleman's opposition to this amendment because clearly it does not make a case for moving toward block granting. This, I might point out, is not the proposal that the President's task force included, because it does not provide for an employment or inflation adjustment which was included in the President's task force.

Second, it does raise some serious concerns about the budgetary accountability for what we do provide to the States, insuring that the money that we do provide to the States goes to the poor and to those that are hungry.

Last, this is a proposal that I think ignores the issue that this is indeed a national program. It is a proposal that is opposed by the National Governors Association, the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National Association of Counties, and many others. For that reason, we would oppose this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER.]

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PEASE

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PEASE: Page 29, after line 8, insert the following new section (and redesignate succeeding sections accordingly):

STUDY OF PACKAGING OF DISTRIBUTABLE COMMODITIES

SEC. 115. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a study—

(1) to identify each of the forms and sizes of packaging currently used by the Commodity Credit Corporation for the storage of milk and the products of milk;

(2) to identify alternative forms and smaller sizes of packaging available for the storage of milk and the products of milk by such Corporation which would make such milk and products of milk more readily available for immediate distribution to recipients under any domestic commodity distribution program administered by the Secretary of Agriculture; and

(3) to determine with respect to each form and size of package, identified under paragraph (1) or paragraph (2), for milk and for each product of milk—

(A) the cost that would be incurred by the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide for the packaging of such milk or product of milk in such form and size of package; and

(B) the cost that would be incurred by such Corporation to store such milk or product of milk as so packaged.

(b) Not later than January 1, 1985, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President pro tempore of the Senate a report specifying the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

Mr. PEASE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks only to ask the Department of Agriculture to conduct a study on alternative ways of packaging surplus dairy products in a way that might make them easier to distribute through the normal channels of distribution, like the cheese programs that we have heard so much about.

This program comes up for reauthorization in 1985, and I am hoping that we can get from the Department of Agriculture some facts and figures about alternative means of packaging so that we can make some intelligent decisions in 1985 which will help us make better use of surplus dairy products to feed poor people in America.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEASE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I would like to state to the gentleman that due to the fact that this is a very delicately crafted piece of legislation with great unanimity within our committee, that I would not want to disrupt that unanimity by inserting other areas of concern. There is a question as to whether this amendment would be proper or not in this legislation. What I would like to assure the gentleman about is that we appreciate his concern, we agree with his concern, and I personally would promise the gentleman that our committee will look at that issue; that I will personally contact the Department. Further, we would ask the Department to conduct, informally, the same request that the gentleman makes, and not have to provide for a study in this legislation.

Mr. PEASE. I thank the chairman of the committee for his obvious concern.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEASE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PANETTA. I would certainly join in the chairman's comments. I think this is an area that we need to look at and we intend to do it with the subcommittee when we consider the reauthorization next year.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Chairman, on the assurance of the distinguished chairman and the distinguished subcommittee chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

Are there any other amendments to title I?

If not, the Clerk will designate title II.

The text of title II is as follows:

TITLE II—NUTRITION MONITORING

SEC. 201. The Secretary of Agriculture shall (1) in conducting the Department of Agriculture's continuing survey of food intakes of individuals and any nationwide food consumption survey, include a sample that is representative of low-income individuals and, to the extent practicable, the collection of information on food and other household expenditures by such individuals, (2) to the extent practicable, continue to maintain the nutrient data base established by the Department of Agriculture, and (3) encourage research by the public and private sectors on effective standards, methodologies, and technologies for accurate assessment of the nutritional and dietary status of individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title II?

If not, the Clerk will designate title III.

The text of title III is as follows:

TITLE III—FOOD, NUTRITION, AND CONSUMER EDUCATION

FINDINGS

SEC. 301. Congress finds that persons in households eligible for the food stamp program and other low-income persons, including those residing in rural areas, should have greater access to nutrition and consumer education to enable them to use their food budgets, including food assistance, effectively and to select and prepare foods that satisfy their nutritional needs and improve their diets.

PURPOSE

SEC. 302. The purpose of the program authorized by this title is to expand effective food, nutrition, and consumer education services to the greatest practicable number of low income persons, including those participating in or eligible to participate in the food stamp program, to assist them to—

(1) increase their ability to manage their food budgets, including food stamps and other food assistance;

(2) advance their ability to buy food that satisfies nutritional needs and promotes good health; and

(3) better their food preparation, storage, safety, preservation, and sanitation practices.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 303. (a) Within the Department of Agriculture, the program authorized by this title shall be administered through the Extension Service in consultation with the Food and Nutrition Service, and the Human Nutrition Information Service. The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter in this title referred to as "the Secretary") shall assure that the Extension Service coordinates activities carried out under this title with the ongoing food, nutrition, and consumer education activities of other agencies of the Department of Agriculture.

(b) The Secretary shall, by not later than April 1, 1988, submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report evaluating the effectiveness of the program authorized by this title.

STATE PARTICIPATION

SEC. 304. The cooperative extension services of the States shall, with funds made available under this title, carry out an expanded program of food, nutrition, and consumer education for low-income persons in a manner designed to achieve the purpose set forth in section 302. In operating the program, the cooperative extension services may utilize the expanded food and nutrition education program and other food, nutrition, and consumer education activities of the cooperative extension services or carried out by them in collaboration with other public or private nonprofit agencies or organizations. In carrying out their responsibilities under the program, the cooperative extension services are encouraged to:

(1) provide effective and meaningful food, nutrition, and consumer education services to as many low-income persons as possible;

(2) employ educational methodologies, including innovative approaches, that accomplish the purpose of this title; and

(3) to the extent practicable, coordinate activities carried out under the program with the delivery to low-income persons of benefits under food assistance programs.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 305. (a) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Agriculture to carry out the program under this title not to exceed, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $5,000,000; for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $10,000,000; and for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988, $15,000,000.

(b) Any funds appropriated annually under this section shall be allocated in the manner specified in section 1425(c)(2) (A) and (B) of the National Agricultural Research, Extension, and Teaching Policy Act of 1977.

(c) Any funds appropriated under this section shall supplement any other funds appropriated to the Department of Agriculture for use by the Department and the cooperative extension services for food, nutrition, and consumer education for low-income households.

● Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5151, the Hunger Relief Act of 1984, as a means to address the serious hunger problems facing this Nation.

In the State of Connecticut alone, a State that houses the headquarters of some 40 of the Fortune 500's largest companies, a State with an unemployment rate significantly lower than the national average, the soup kitchens and emergency food distributors have experienced large increases in demand for hunger relief.

Not only are more people coming to the soup kitchens, but they are coming earlier in the month than they ever have before. Traditionally, soup kitchens experience their heaviest demand toward the end of the month as people's welfare money runs out. But now people are running out of money for food by the second week of the month.

The Thomas Merten House in Bridgeport, CT, has experienced a 100-percent increase in the number of people needing food assistance since 1980. The Stamford soup kitchen has experienced a similar increase in demand in just the past year. Imagine, a 100-percent increase in the demand for emergency hunger relief in a city with one of the lowest unemployment rates of any city in the country.

The most disturbing trend amongst all these statistics is the dramatic increase in the number of mothers with small children visiting these soup kitchens, which have traditionally been the domain of single males. There is something fundamentally wrong with a Federal Food Assistance Program that fails to adequately provide for the nutritional needs of underprivileged babies.

Children are the future of this Nation, yet many soup kitchens have been forced to change their policy of not serving unaccompanied children in response to the tremendous number of young children who are wandering into the kitchens hungry.

The President's own Task Force on Food Assistance found that hunger is a "real and significant problem throughout the Nation."

H.R. 5151 begins to address the hunger by using the task force recommendations as its core. The task force recommended that: First, the benefits under the program be restored to a level that represents the Thrifty Food Plan; second, households, all of whose members receive assistance under Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] or supplemental security income [SSI] be categorically eligible for food stamps; third, work incentives for participants in the Food Stamp Program be increased; fourth, assets and/or resource eligibility standards be upgraded; fifth, that food stamps distribution should be staggered throughout the month and the offices should be opened some evenings and weekends; and sixth, the homeless should be incorporated more into the program. These recommendations are specifically addressed in this bill.

Under H.R. 5151, the Thrifty Food Program is funded at 100 percent; AFDC and SSI recipients become categorically eligible for food stamps; the deduction for earned income is raised from 18 to 20 percent to provide work incentives; assets are increased from $3,000 to $3,500 for the elderly—$1,500 to $2,250 for other households and the allowance for an automobile is increased from $4,500—a figure implemented in 1977—to $5,500, as recommended by the task force; food stamps are to be staggered throughout the month and the homeless are specifically mentioned as eligible for the Food Stamp Program.

In dollar terms, the bill restores only about one-seventh of the large reductions made in the Food Stamp Program in 1981 and 1982. According to the Congressional Budget Office, it is estimated that the 1981-1982 cuts reduced the fiscal year 1985 spending by $2.06 billion. H.R. 5151 increases fiscal year 1985 spending by $305 million which means over 85 percent of the original savings remain intact. Additionally, no antifraud or antiabuse provisions have been repealed in this bill. As a matter of fact, this bill toughens measures regarding States with error rates over 5 percent.

H.R. 5151 is a modest response to the hunger problem facing this Nation today. Eliminating the hunger problem in this country will be a long and arduous task. This Congress must face up to the challenge that stands before it.●

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Chairman, the Hunger Relief Act, H.R. 5151 moves in the right direction although perhaps not as quickly as I had hoped.

When I signed on to cosponsor this legislation, the estimated benefits were three times the size of the current proposal. Even with the initial piece of legislation, I questioned whether we really met the needs of all those on food stamps. In my district, one does not have to read the lastest Presidential Commission's findings to recognize hunger in America. It is on the streets, in the classrooms, and on the faces of the people. They do not understand why this Congress must fight the administration in order to pass food stamp legislation. And frankly, Mr. Chairman nor do I.

I will support this legislation before us today because our people need the program. There are a number of parts of this legislation that will do so good. Raising the maximum allotment for food stamps back to 100 percent of the USDA thrifty food plan for instance. This was one of the administration's major cuts in 1981. Another important provision is raising the asset limits for nonelderly households from $1,500 to $2,250 and for elderly households from $3,000 to $3,500 is a good thing.

Where this legislation runs into trouble concerns State error rates. It is not that we want to condone fraudulent practices. It is that we do not want to see States losing money because the real losers will be those who need food. While I agree that some reform may be needed, it is apparent that we must not make us such strigent formula as to jeopardize food stamp recipients in need.

It seems clear to me that the intent of a Hunger Relief Act is to meet the need of those who are hungry. Anything that would in anyway reduce our ability to do so should be guarded against. We, in this House know the legislative realities. We know that the White House finds more comfort in trimming social programs then providing the services. It is for this reason, we must pass legislation such as this whenever we can, with the hope that a new administration will end this legislative nightmare of feeding our poor and work with us, not against us. Until then, it is necessary for us to continue to promote these programs in whatever piecemeal fashion for which we can gain support.●

● Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill with a particularly apt and poignant title. Here in the wealthiest and mightiest country the world has ever known, 21 million people need food stamps to eke out the most basic of living standards.

This bill is very modest. It would raise the maximum allotment of food stamps from 99 to 100 percent of the Agriculture Department's thrifty food plan this coming fiscal year and to 101 percent of the thrifty plan in fiscal 1986. At the same time, the amount of earned income that could be deducted from gross income in calculating the stamp benefit would be increased from 18 to 20 percent.

Furthermore, in an effort to catch up just a bit with inflation, elderly households would be allowed in this bill to have $3,500 in assets, as opposed to $3,000 under current law, and still be eligible for stamps. Those who are not senior citizens would be able to have assets of $2,250, instead of the current $1,500.

Reciting these figures is disheartening because they are so little for many who need more. And we should remember that this administration severely cut the program in years past. The least we can do is to support the modest changes in this bill.●

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I am in support of the Hunger Relief Act of 1984. The Committee on Agriculture must be commended for taking a positive step to ease the hardship caused by increasing hunger at a time when the Food Stamp Program is the subject of scorn and inaccurate allegations in some conservative quarters.

At the very same time the Reagan administration was advocating major benefit reductions in the Food Stamp Program in 1981, hunger was reemerging as a major domestic problem. I believe those untimely cuts have been a major contributor to the growing hunger, and the administration must take responsibility.

Contrary to the President's assertion at his most recent press conference that not a single fact or figure proves his budget cuts have hurt the poor, a just-released Congressional Research Service study found that the 1981 reductions in cash welfare pushed more than half a million people into poverty. The majority of those individuals were children.

Ours is a country rich in agricultural resources, yet hungry people are lining up at soup kitchens, food pantries and shelters in numbers greater than any time since the Great Depression. The more than 160 soup kitchens and food pantries operating in New York City are serving up to and beyond their capacity.

New York's St. John the Baptist Church was serving 100 people per day when it opened its mid-day meal program just over a year ago. Today, that number has grown to 300. During the first 9 months of 1983, one voluntary food hotline reports it received more calls for food assistance than had been received in all of 1982. A large majority of the hotline's calls are requests for emergency food.

We don't have to rely solely on New York City's evidence. Recent reports on hunger by the President's Task Force on Food Assistance and the U.S. Department of Agriculture have documented that an increasing number of food stamp recipients are without food by the third or fourth week of each month. Many of these families seek assistance from emergency sources like food pantries, but some simply do without.

H.R. 5151 is an appropriate and reasonable effort to address the nutrition needs of our most disadvantaged citizens—the poor, the unemployed, the elderly, and the disabled.

The bill restores a modest $300 million in benefits in fiscal year 1985 by ordering a number of changes in the Food Stamp Program's administration—including many recommended by the President's Task Force on Food Assistance.

In approving this measure, we are voting to link food stamps to more realistic minimum nutritional standards by basing benefits in fiscal year 1985 on 100 percent of the thrifty food plan.

We are easing the financial burden on those recipients incurring high shelter and child care costs.

We are recognizing the plight of the new poor, who are needy even though they have assets that disqualify them from eligibility, by raising the assets limitation for certain automobiles to a more realistic level.

We are providing States with flexibility and reduced administration costs by making monthly reporting optional.

And we are pulling into the safety net the thousands of homeless people who are among our neediest citizens by declaring them eligible for food stamps.

This legislation is not without its problem provisions, however. By drastically increasing sanctions against States incurring high error rates in administering benefits, H.R. 5151 threatens to unnecessarily clobber States already facing severe penalties. Moreover, the method used by the Department of Agriculture in computing error rate sanctions is highly suspect. It prompted the Agriculture Committee to adopt an amendment ordering a study of the sanctions issue.

While the measure raises to $155 the combined ceiling for excess shelter costs and dependent-care deductions—used to determine eligibility and benefit levels—it fails to go far enough. To truly keep pace with rising rents and utility costs, I believe the excess shelter cost ceiling should be increased to $175. To assist the working poor and provide an additional incentive to unemployed recipients to seek work or job training, the dependent care deduction should be separated and capped at $160.

Last, H.R. 5151 only partially restores the deep and unfair cuts the Food Stamp Program has sustained since the incumbent President took office. I would hope that next year, when the Food Stamp Program comes up for reauthorization, we can make substantially more progress in alleviating hunger in the United States.

Meanwhile, the bill before us will serve as a modest downpayment on a major problem. I know my colleague and good friend from California [Mr. PANETTA] has worked closely with the minority members on his subcommittee to develop a mutually acceptable, bipartisan measure. This admirable effort deserves our strong support.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5151, the Hunger Relief Act. This legislation makes several reforms to the current Food Stamp Program; many of these reforms were proposed by the President's Task Force on Hunger.

Mr. Chairman, the U.S. Conference of Mayors conducted a study of hunger recently. In many of the cities studied, the cities were unable to serve all of those in need of food assistance. Even though government agencies, religious and volunteer groups have made extraordinary efforts to respond to the need for food assistance, the need far exceeds private and public resources available. Another survey showed that demand for emergency food aid had increased in 95 percent of the cities by an average of 71 percent.

Additionally, food assistance is now going to a new class of poor—the people who have been laid off and have very little expectation of ever returning to their former occupation. The President's Task Force on Hunger indicated that increased funding levels would not necessarily eliminate hunger in this Nation unless it was coupled with other structural reforms in the food stamp program. By and large, this legislation makes those reforms.

For example, the legislation extends food stamp eligibility to the homeless, increases food stamp benefit levels to 100 percent of the Agriculture Department's thrifty food plan, 101 percent in 1986, increases asset levels, and increases the earned income disregard. The legislation also makes a significant change to current law with respect to Monthly Reporting and Retrospective Budgeting [MRRB]. The legislation allows States the option of using MRRB, but does not require them to do so. The present law requirement is difficult for many States to administer, and is costly to administer.

Mr. Chairman, all of these changes have a modest price tag when compared to the benefits they will provide. This legislation will take us one giant step toward reducing hunger in this bountiful Nation. Why should anyone be forced to go hungry in America?●

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5151, the Hunger Relief Act of 1984. This is a limited attempt by this body to respond to the alarming presence of poverty and hunger in the United States. This legislation seeks to address one of the cities in our midst, a city of hunger and desperation such as described by Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York in his depiction of our Nation as a "Tale of Two Cities."

H.R. 5151, most importantly, would increase benefits for food stamp recipients by basing maximum benefits in fiscal year 1985 on 100 percent of the thrifty food program. Benefits would subsequently be based on 101 percent of the thrifty food program in fiscal year 1986, returning to 100 percent of the thrifty food program in fiscal year 1987. This benefit increase is a response to the cruel budget cuts contained in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 which reduced food stamp benefits in fiscal year 1982 through fiscal year 1985 by holding benefits to 99 percent of the Agriculture Department thrifty food plan.

This measure also expands eligibility to include the many homeless who meet other eligibility standards required to receive food stamps. Additionally, the Hunger Relief Act provides for automatic coverage for recipients of aid to families with dependent children and recipients of SSI.

Mr. Speaker, we need to pass this bill if our Government is to pass the moral test in terms of how it affects the young, the elderly, the handicapped, and the needy. Relief organizations in the District of Columbia continue to indicate to me that hunger is getting worse.

The Congress in reducing the food stamp program made a mistake. More than 1 million beneficiaries lost their eligibility when we reduced the food stamp program by 13 percent in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982.

The food stamp program, as it is presently constituted, based on the inadequate thrifty food program, barely provides subsistence for affected families. The Hunger Relief Act is a small beginning in the long walk we will have to take if we are to really have one nation and not a continuing "Tale of Two Cities."

I urge my colleagues to pass H.R. 5151.●

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title III?

If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MOAKLEY) having assumed the chair, Mr. TORRES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5151) to alleviate hunger in the United States by strengthening Federal nutrition programs, pursuant to House Resolution 517, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole?

If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 364, noes 39, not voting 30, as follows:

Mr. HUNTER and Mr. DEWINE changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION AND NATIONAL SECURITY OF COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS TO SIT TOMORROW DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Legislation and National Security of the Committee on Government Operations be permitted to sit tomorrow for hearing while the House is under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

STATUS REPORT ON AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE LEGISLATION

(Mr. DE LA GARZA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, last week, in response to your request, I submitted a brief letter on the subject of legislation from the Agriculture Committee which remains pending before this session of Congress.

Today I want to share that information with our colleagues who are interested in these bills. It includes some legislation of great importance, some matters which I believe should be decided before we end this session.

One of those bills will come before the House for final action soon. That is H.R. 5151, the Hunger Relief Act. I hope the House will adopt this bill by the same overwhelming bipartisan margin it got in the House Agriculture Committee. And I hope also, Mr. Speaker, that the other body can be persuaded to act on this badly needed legislation this year.

Another issue of great significance is the soil conservation bill, S. 663, which is currently in conference. The House has passed a sound bill which has broad bipartisan support. We have not yet been able to reach agreement in the conference, and I can only tell the House that your conferees will do everything they can to work out a compromise that retains the basic elements of the House bill.

Also, I would remind the House that time is running short for final action on a third major bill, H.R. 3050, the Rural Electrification and Telephone Self-Sufficiency Act. The House passed that bill back on March 1. The Senate has not yet acted on this measure which is needed to provide long-term safeguards for rural electrification.

Beyond these bills, I want to list for the information of members other bills which the Agriculture Committee may bring to the House or which have passed the House and are awaiting action in the other body.

Bills originating in the Agriculture Committee which are expected to be brought before the House are:

House Joint Resolution 600, the Agricultural Trade and Export Policy Commisson Act (which was also referred to the Foreign Affairs and Ways and Means Committees).

House Resolution 3150, a conveyance of land to the Sabine River Authority in Texas.

Senate 1643, a bill to strengthen the operation of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee system.

Bills which have passed the House and are pending in the Senate include:

H.R. 3903, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to develop and implement a coordinated agricultural conservation program in the Colorado River Basin.

H.R. 5223, to exempt restaurant central kitchens from Federal inspection requirements.

H.R. 5358, the Honey Research, Promotion and Consumer Information Act.

H.R. 2714, the Agricultural Productivity Act.

H.R. 2784, the Atlantic Tunas Convention Act—originally reported by the House Agriculture and Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committees.

H.R. 2838, assistance to groups and organizations volunteering to plant tree seedlings on public lands.

H.R. 5221, to extend the period during which amendments to the U.S. Grain Standards Act contained in the 1981 Budget Reconciliation Act will remain in effect. The legislation would continue a system requiring users of Federal inspection services to pay the full cost of the services.

H.R. 5183, a Virginia land conveyance.

A number of wilderness bills which originated in the House Interior Committee and were also referred to the House Agriculture Committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SILJANDER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] go before mine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO BALANCE THE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, this evening I have asked for a special order and am pleased that my colleague from Michigan would yield me some of his time to discuss once again before this House a most important issue that is now before us in two forms. For some time we have had an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, Congressman BARBER CONABLE in the House Judiciary Committee, a proposed amendment to the Constitution to balance the Federal budget and limit taxes. We now have at the Speaker's desk a discharge petition, discharge petition No. 10, that would discharge an open rule for the purpose of dealing with that piece of legislation that is before the House Judiciary Committee to allow it to come to the floor for not only amendment, if so chosen by this membership, but most importantly for debate and for consideration by this House so that it could be sent out to the States for their consideration, an issue that in the latest of pollings shows over 83 percent of the American public now believes that it is essential, that for this body, this House, this Congress to control its spending it must be controlled by a constitutional amendment that will require a balanced budget and limit taxation so that the Congress would not just balance the budget on the backs of the taxpayers.

I concur, and now 160 of my colleagues having signed discharge petition No. 10 also concur. I would urge all of my colleagues here in the House to stand up in support of that amendment, in support of that discharge petition, and sign discharge petition 10.

Mr. MARLENEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAIG. I will be happy to yield to my colleague from Montana.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, I will not only support the discharge petition, but I will support the gentleman.

But I would like to point out when you stated that some 83 percent of the people supported it, that my latest poll shows that in Montana about 75 percent of the people in organized labor support this same petition for this balanced budget amendment.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. CRAIG. I appreciate my colleague bringing up the issue of who supports this.

For some time there have been many who have attempted to say that the issue of a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget and limit taxation is in large part a conservative issue, that it belongs, if you will, to Republicans and not to Democrats, or to conservatives and not to liberals.

It is interesting that when we look at the discharge petition it is not a partisan issue at all. I believe at current count already some 25 Democrats have already signed on that discharge petition and I am sure there will be a good many more.

My colleague from Montana is absolutely right. In his State he is a leader and has served in that leadership position in pushing the issue of an initiative drive which was completed in Montana to qualify the issue of a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget to be placed on the ballot out there in November. I am quite sure that because of the magnitude of signatures, some 60,000 plus, that there are Republicans and Democrats alike.

Why is that so? I think because the average American is now saying more loudly and clearly than they ever have before that it is time for this Congress to get its fiscal house in order, that every business man and woman, that every housewife and every husband has to on a regular basis consider the fact that they must balance their budgets, that they cannot run on and on in perpetua in a deficit situation, or some day, at some time, their friendly banker calls and says "pay up."

The American public understands that so very clearly. Forty-four States of this Nation must balance their budgets on an annual basis. They understand that so very clearly.

Yet it seems that it is only the Members of this House and of the other body, that body across the Rotunda, that have for some reason over a long period of time, by a majority of the Members, decided that this Congress and this Government does not have to. And in so doing over the years they have perpetuated a debt that is now so large that on an annual basis the taxpayers of this country must dig up over $100 billion just to finance the interest on the debt alone.

That is why it is not a partisan issue. That is why it is very much a bipartisan issue, because it is Democrats and Republicans alike, liberals and conservatives, taxpayers out there that we are having to ask now on that annual basis to come up with that $100 billion to finance the debt creation that this body has been involved in for over 25 years.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAIG. I will be happy to yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think we do want to clarify though here that there are individual Democrats who share our concern about balancing the budget and so, therefore, have endorsed the discharge petition and have endorsed the amendment. There is, however, a difference between the two parties, is there not?

Mr. CRAIG. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALKER. Is it not true that the Democratic Party platform specifically says that they do not favor a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. CRAIG. It is my understanding that the platform that was drafted in San Francisco recently at their national convention and passed by a majority of their delegates, does possess that clause in it.

Mr. WALKER. So that platform literally puts aside the 83 percent of the American people who say they favor that approach and says to them "Your concerns do not bother us. What you want is not a concern of ours. We as a party are taking a policy position that we do not favor a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution."

Is that your understanding of the situation?

Mr. CRAIG. That is my understanding, yes.

Mr. WALKER. Beyond that, is it not true that we also have a problem developing with regard to the discharge petition, that all of a sudden we are beginning to see people who have signed up on the discharge petition taking their names off?

□ 2030

Mr. CRAIG. I understand there have been a couple in the last several days that have done so.

Mr. WALKER. And would that not be an indication that there may be some pressure being put on by the leadership around here to remove names from the discharge petition so that it does not have the chance of reaching 218?

Mr. CRAIG. Well, I think that is a reasonable conclusion that can be drawn, but I have to also mention to my colleague from Pennsylvania that the leadership of this House for a long, long time has prohibited the membership from the opportunity of debating a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget and an opportunity to send it out to the States. That is why we have to use the tool of a discharge petition; because a discharge petition in itself says that the committee chairman who presides over the committee or presides over the committee in which this bill now resides has refused to allow the debate and allow that bill or in this case, the amendment to come forth for debate.

I think that is what it says so clearly.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAIG. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman further.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding further. I think it is important then to put into perspective what the gentleman just told us.

The gentleman is absolutely right and I think it is a point we need to clarify. But then is it not true that what they tell us that, "You have a route to get this through, if we will now allow debate, there is a route you can get this issue to the floor. You get a discharge petition at the desk."

And so what is now happening is that after the discharge petition is at the desk then, eventually what is happening is the same people who recommend that to us as a route of bringing the bill to the floor, if in fact they will not permit it to be debated, are then going to people and muscling them to take their names off the discharge petition?

In other words, it is one whole scheme of hypocrisy that suggests that people are not at all willing to have this issue discussed, are not willing to see any of the mechanisms of the House work to have the issue discussed and in fact may plunge this Nation toward a constitutional crisis as a result of the willingness of this House to debate a very legitimate issue that 83 percent of the American people say that they favor and only the Democratic Party in their policy statement says it does not favor.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. CRAIG. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SILJANDER. To compound the situation, it seems rather ironic that the same organization, the same leadership, not referring to all the individuals of the other side of the aisle, but the same leadership who seems, at least by inference, to be urging some of their colleagues to take their names off the discharge petition in one breath, in a second breath we heard at the national convention and so on on the floor and especially during 1-minutes, we have heard such dynamic orations about the deficits, and how the deficits are a crime and how "this Congress needs to deal with the deficits and why does not the Congress and why does not this President deal with the deficits"?

I have heard that from the other side of the aisle too many times, too numerous times to mention. But is not it also interesting that many of us on the same floor, in the same well, where all these speeches have been made about the deficits, we asked our Republican leadership, through the proper legal procedures and rules of this House, "Will you please allow us to bring under a unanimous-consent request the balanced budget amendment to the floor for an honest and open debate and honest and open vote?"

Sixty-five times, as I have counted; 65 different days someone on this side of the aisle has asked unanimous consent and OK by each of the leaderships. Sixty-five times the Republican leadership has said, "Yes, please bring up the balanced budget tax limitation amendment, please bring it up for a vote, allow the American people to witness, observe and read in the journal, observe over C-SPAN an honest and fair debate."

So we have 50 percent of the leadership agreeing, on the Republican side. Then we have yielded 65 times over to the other side, the majority side. Sixty-five times we have been turned down. We have been turned down by a silence on the majority side that will not allow that open forum for airing the opinions and the views of 83 percent of the American people.

I think it is pertinent, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] has pointed out, the gentleman from Idaho so articulately pointed out, that there is arm twisting going on. Can you prove it? Absolutely not. But is it not ironic that, though we requested it 65 times and the majority leadership has refused, and is it not interesting that majority members who have signed the discharge petitions, their names are mysteriously being withdrawn?

I think it is pretty clear what is happening. It is not the first time that this type of mysterious phenomenon has occurred on discharge petitions as the numbers have grown steadily toward the key mark of 218 which is required to force the bill out of committee.

If the gentleman would further yield, I have one more point I would like to make if I might. So many of my constituents have asked, "Congressman SILJANDER, why do not the Members of Congress simply balance the budget? Why do not you do it without a constitutional requirement? Just have the integrity and the honesty to respond and act" as the gentleman in the well indicated earlier, "like any American family must do to simply balance their budget? Why do we have to have pass in 38 States, pass a resolution forcing you to do a job that we have elected you to do?"

That is a tough question for an incumbent Member of Congress. My answer, I feel has been equally as vigorous as the question.

I have said that Congress, in analogy form, is much like a drug addict; we are addicted to spending as a body. And each and every time we need another fix the answer in 1982, the answer in 1983, again this year in 1984, the answer has always been shoot up another tax increase, give us more and more taxes, drain the pocketbooks of more and more Americans to give us that liberty and freedom to spend and spend and tax and tax.

And just like anyone addicted to any drug, giving that person more drug will not wean him or her off that drug. What is required is a forcible situation, withdrawing, weaning away, if you will, that drug from an addict.

This Congress has attempted, some of us in this Congress have attempted through the concept of the American Opportunity Society, to stop the liberal welfare society from spending this country down the drain to economic catastrophe. We have tried to bring up, as I said, 65 times, to bring up a forced weaning of the Congress from taxes and spending.

The resolution of the gentleman has been supporting tirelessly for months, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] has been supporting for months and months, in my opinion and I must candidly say to you as I have said to my constituents many times over, there is no other alternative, there is no alternative regarding integrity.

That is not an alternative because we have consistently shown we do not have the integrity as a body to handle ourselves. We just seem to be addicted hopelessly to spending and taxation.

The only alternative as I have said to my constituents is a forced constitutional amendment to force us to live within our means like most Americans are required to do. And that, to the gentleman in the well, from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] is my answer to my constituents.

It ought to be the only answer that Congress will never do it on their own. We will never balance the budget, or even attempt to, without the answer of more and more taxes. History proves that. The last 3 years have proven that unequivocally.

So I just want to tell the gentleman that I personally appreciate his time and his efforts in trying to be one of the Members in this body who has enough integrity and guts, courage to stand in the well and tell his fellow colleagues, and many of the American people, exactly what needs to be done to bring this economic spiral of spending and economic ruin and inconsistency and economic poor behavior of this Congress into line. You have been one of the few.

Now we are seeing more and more sign up. I, as the gentleman in the well, would encourage more courage amongst our Congressmen, our fellow colleagues, to go to the well, to sign the discharge petition No. 10, and not just run home to our districts and tell our constitutents, "Yes, we should balance this budget" and "Yes, we should get these deficits under control" and then come back here and do nothing about it. That is a specific detailed vehicle to limit the insane spending and the irrational taxation that this Congress has been perpetrating on the American middle-income sector for too many years.

Thank goodness for you, and thank goodness for discharge petition No. 10. And if we, enough of us, could put our signatures where our mouths are, we would find this Congress acting more responsibly in finding the 83 percent of the American people who expect us to act with integrity and courage to do so.

Please, let us sign that discharge petition and not wait for two more States to satisfy the constitutional mandate of 34 States calling for the Congress for a balanced budget amendment. Let us not allow the States to force us into doing something that we should do on our own. This is our last chance. In my opinion, there is a good opportunity by November that two more States will in fact, through resolution through their State legislatures or through referendum on their ballots, pass the mandate to force us to live within our means and not to tax them into the economic grave.

So I want to just, lastly, thank the gentleman for his time in yielding to me to share what I consider a very important difference between integrity and courage and the Congress refusing to yield to an addition of spending and taxation.

Mr. CRAIG. Let me thank my colleague from Michigan not only for his words and his wisdom but I think the clarity with which he has expressed one of the great problems that this country now faces. It is the problem of the House. It is the problem of the Senate of the United States. It is the problem of the body politic, the membership of this body that simply cannot control the appetite that you talked about.

I several months ago created an organization called CLUBB, Congressional Leaders United for a Balanced Budget, and my colleague from Michigan is a member of that. That organization, recognizing that this House was incapable of responding to the wishes of the American people, also recognizes that the vehicle exists, as you mentioned, in the latter portion of article V of the Constitution, in which States could force the issue upon Congress, the issue of a constitutional amendment. We decided that we may have to go out and ask State legislatures to help us to help ourselves, because I guess you are right, as an addict of spending, you really cannot help yourself any longer. You have to have someone else who kind of takes you by the hand and says it is time to dry out, it is time to get help, it is time to get advice, in the case of the addict, medical advice, in the case of this Congress, we need some darn good fiscal advice.

Recognizing that, I went to your State of Michigan. We worked with the State senate up in Michigan and issued forth a resolution that went through the committee, legislative committee, in Michigan, and passed the State senate in Michigan by almost a 2-to-1 vote. It is now in the house in Michigan. I believe it is in the judiciary committee there in the house, the Michigan Legislature. And we are very hopeful that Michigan in the late summer, in September when they reconvene, will be the 33d State of the Nation that will stand up, like already 32 States have since 1976 and have said to the Congress of the United States, "Do it. Either issue forth an amendment to balance the Federal budget and limit taxation or allow the convening of a Constitutional Convention for the purpose of authoring that amendment."

Now, it is interesting to me that a lot of people out there in the country today who once argued against that approach, saying that you just could not balance the budget because the Congress simply knew better than the citizens of this country how to run government and how to spend money, they are not using that argument any longer against the constitutional amendment for a balanced budget. Now they are saying that it is the fear of the convention that we must guard against, it is the fear that Congress may well force this Nation—remember, I said "Congress may well force this Nation," not the States, not the States that are petitioning Congress today for the purpose of a Constitutional Convention for a balanced budget, but the Congress in its unwillingness to act, the leadership of this House in its unwillingness to allow the Judiciary Committee of this House to send forth an amendment for the States to ratify will force a Constitutional Convention. We hope that will not happen but at the same time the pressure is necessary. And that is what is going on in Michigan today and other States.

My colleague from Montana was here a few minutes ago. They have run the initiative effort in Montana and are successful. We are working the initiative effort in California. So we hope that can be the case, second, but we hope the House is responsible enough to move prior to that happening.

Mr. SILJANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAIG. I will be happy to yield once again to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. SILJANDER. I once again thank the gentleman from Idaho for yielding.

Michigan is a key State. That is the State I represent. One of my State senators, Senator Ed Fredricks, introduced a resolution in the senate that has passed the senate committee, as you indicated, and passed the full senate. We are hopeful that there are the votes in the Michigan house of Representatives in Lansing, MI, to pass out of that committee a resolution calling for us to balance our budget. And if I were listening to this scenario unfold tonight and the clear articulation of the need for fiscal responsibility, I would write, and I intend to write my State representative, and tell him in Michigan to please vote for that and do all they can do to make sure that resolution is out of committee.

Would it not be great for Michigan to be the 33d or even the 34th State, Michigan, which turned over a State senate in midelection year, in the middle of the term, because of a tax issue, recalled two Senators, reelected different party members, and turned the leadership from the Democrats to the Republicans? Why did Michigan do that? Because they are fed up with too many taxes, they are fed up with taxation. Michigan has their own balanced budget amendment. Michigan is required to balance their budget.

So I hope that with the same furor that the Michigan Representatives overturned the State senate, they will also make sure that the State house acts responsibly and passes that resolution, or thay ought to consider doing the same thing in the State house of representatives in Lansing, MI.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague from Michigan. He has an opportunity to have a State legislator that he can write in Michigan. I do not have that opportunity. But I am going to write every member of the State house in the State of Michigan, encouraging them to issue forth that resolution based on the premise that I need their help and that every Member of this Congress needs their help in developing the strength and the backbone to be fiscally responsible.

Believe it or not, the legislature in the State of Michigan can do more to help us right now than almost any other force out there by issuing forth that resolution and becoming the 33d or 34th State.

I will be happy to yield to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the gentleman from Idaho for yielding, and I want to compliment the gentleman for taking this special order and I also want to compliment him for the diligent work he has put forth in working for a balanced budget amendment. I think his pleading in the long run is going to pay off, at least I certainly hope so, because we need to work for a balanced budget in this country if for no other reason than if we do not, we are going to have high interest rates and higher interest rates. And we know that 72 percent of all of the jobs in this country come from small business, and high interest rates are going to put a real damper on this economy. That is what we do not want to see.

But, I do not know whether all of the blame for it lies in this House or in the other body. I look at it just a little bit differently. I agree with everything you have said, but I think that some of the onus rests on the American people, too, and the reason I say that is this: Mao Tse-tung said that in China power grows out of the barrel of a gun. But in this country, power grows out of the precincts. And when the people in the precincts speak, then I think we in this House are more apt to listen.

The reason I say that is that this is the 30th anniversary, 1954 to 1984, 30 years, that one party has ruled in this House, that has held the purse strings of this Government. And as the great financier, the genius in finance, Baron von Rothschild said, "If I can control the pursestrings, I care not who runs the government."

And who is controlling the purse-strings in this Government? And who has ruled and who has held the purse strings for 30 years?

Now, the gentleman from Idaho has yielded me the time. You come from an area that has a good many horses, and you know that if you do not have the reins you cannot drive the team, right? And I think that is something we have to face here in this House. And until we get the American people to speak and to speak on November 6, they determine who sits in this House, they deermine to a great degree how we vote.

□ 2050

So I think that our pleading has to go not only to the Members on the other side, but our pleading has to go to every single man and woman in America who walks into the ballot booth on November 6, and to say, "This is what we stand for. This is what the other people stand for. If you want our opinions, if you want our views to be implemented, you have to give us your support."

I think when we do that, I say to the gentleman, then I think that we are going to start moving this body, because as long as we do not have the numbers if is going to make it awfully difficult for someone like you. I know the gentleman has been working on this for weeks and months. He has gone all over the country. He has done a real yeoman's job, but I think he is going to need help and I think that help has to come not only from people on this side of the aisle; I think that help has to come from the American people.

I once again say that if the American people speak in the precincts, then we are going to start making these changes, but if we do not speak in the precincts as a nation, then we are not going to make the changes because we are going to have the same old policies we have had for 30 years. That is why I think this election November 6 is going to be so crucial.

You can elect whoever you want as President, you can do all kinds of things in government, but if you do not control the House of Representatives, you do not control the purse strings, and again as Rothschild said, "If I can control the purse strings, I care not who runs the government." That is the way I look at it.

Mr. CRAIG. Let me thank my colleague for that insight, and I really mean that. That is a very insightful comment. It is true that the American public has to share some of the responsibility for the deficit that has been created by this Congress over a long period of time because they have said in part, and sometimes in larger ways, that they want certain kinds of programs to solve certain kinds of problems.

But it is interesting when it comes to this issue. They did not say they wanted that program outside of a balanced budget. While they said they may have wanted their government to do something for them, they said they wanted their government also to be fiscally responsible, and I think they are saying that more today than they ever have. But the trick is, and I use the word "trick," is that we have allowed for so long Members of this body here, the House of the U.S. Congress, to go home and to tell their colleagues that they support a balanced budget, they were for it, absolutely; they would do everything there was to support and to work toward a balanced budget. But then they would come back here and make sure that did not happen.

It was always easy to be able to say you were for something, but then to have to really be put on the line of being for something, and to not only go home and say, "I support the idea but I am doing something real about it," that is why we now have discharge petition No. 10 up here, for Republicans and Democrats alike to say not only at home that they support what 83 percent of their constituency now says Congress must do, but they are actually going to do something about it. They are going to come back and they are going to sign discharge petition No. 10 and they are going to ask the leadership of this House to send to the floor a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget, limit taxes, so that we can debate it here, pass it out of this body and send it to the States of the Union for ratification.

There has been that opportunity in the past to say one thing and do another. We, by this effort, I hope, tonight are saying that now you have the opportunity to do as you have been saying for so long. And there are Members like that, and I am not saying that they are being dishonest. They are just finding it convenient to not do as they say.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAIG. I would be happy to yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, one of our great assets in the fight for the balanced budget is the fact that the President of the United States has announced that he thinks that this is a priority, that we need to move on a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

Some of the critics of that effort, and some of the critics of the president, then turn around and suggest that if the President is so serious about this, why does he not present a balanced budget; why does he not come forward with a balanced budget? To many people that would seem to be a legitimate argument and one that has some validity, and we hear it constantly.

I think the issue here, and it is an important issue, is the fact that the President of the United States has said to the American people flatly by endorsing this concept, "I am willing to be disciplined. I am willing to operate within the discipline of a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget."

The question now before the country is: Is Congress willing to be disciplined? Are they willing to live within the discipline of a balanced budget?

The answer clearly coming from this Congress is "No." The answer clearly coming from the Democratic Party in their platform is "No." The answer clearly coming from their candidate for President is "No." We have heard a lot from their candidate for President about the fact that he wants to fight deficits. I think what he said in his acceptance speech was that someone who wants to be President to fight deficits has to have the courage to say no; he has to be willing to use the veto pen. He was trying to criticize this administration.

I guess the question that arises is: Where has Walter Mondale shown that he is willing to stand up for smaller doses of spending? He certainly did not in the platform. There is one phrase in the platform, in the environmental section of the platform, one phrase that says, "To clean up all sites that threaten the public health."

I had totaled up by the staff of the committee with jurisdiction in this House. That is $153 billion of add-on spending for that one phrase that is in their platform. Walter Mondale did not have the guts to say no to the platform committee that added $153 billion of add-on spending to the platform. Where is he going to get the guts to say no when these bills come down to his desk? What would happen with the bills that we saw on the House floor today?

Today we had a good example of the dedication of this body to do something about deficits. We had one amendment offered to the Labor-HHS bill, which is the single largest appropriation that will go through this House, the single largest one, and Congressman FRENZEL offered an amendment to cut 6 percent out of discretionary spending; not out of the whole budget, just out of discretionary spending. How did the parties vote? The Republicans voted for the Frenzel amendment. The Democrats voted overwhelmingly against the Frenzel amendment.

I offered a 1-percent cut on the supplemental bill. That was an important 1-percent cut that we had out here today because that was to a bill that was described by the chairman of the committee as being a series of spending measures that the administration asked for; that the only reason why we had this supplemental bill out was because the administration had come up and asked for this spending.

They said, "We have made some adjustments, we have defined our own priorities," and I guess that is what we ought to do around here, but the point was that this was add-on Reagan deficit. This is something we are going to hear more about as being Reagan deficit money, and I said, "Why do we not cut 1 percent out of it? Why do we not cut $54 million?"

Overwhelmingly, look at the party votes. Overwhelmingly the Republicans voted for that 1-percent cut; overwhelmingly, the Democrats voted against it. Overwhelmingly, the Democrats said, "We do not want to cut anything of of these Reagan deficits that we are talking about. We want to spend more money." I think it is important to understand that.

Or the final vote that we had here today was on the question of whether or not we ought to tighten up on the Food Stamp Program or whether we ought to liberalize it. Across this country the American people understand that that program is just ridden with waste, fraud, and abuse. They see it in their food markets. They see it in their towns. They know doggone well that that is a program that has problems.

What did we vote to do on the House floor today by an overwhelming margin? We voted on the House floor today to liberalize this. We voted on the House floor today to say that somebody can own a 1978 Jaguar or a 1979 Cadillac limousine and still collect food stamps. We voted to open up the process more than it has been opened before.

I would suggest that a party that is talking about deficits as much as the Democratic Party is, and as much as our Presidential candidate is, really has some major problems when you take a look at their record and take a look at what the real facts are behind their spending practices.

Mr. CRAIG. Let me thank my colleague from Pennsylvania.

In closing this special order tonight, I think it can be said with some certainty that one of the problems that the Members of this House face today is the inability to say no, the inability to look at all of the priorities that we have given this Congress to spend in, that we have placed in Government over the years, and say that really one of the major forces that causes the cyclical nature of our economy, that creates unemployment that causes high interest rates, is our inability to stabilize our spending and keep it within a reasonable percentage of the gross national product of this country. We have no capacity to do that today. The will does not exist in this Congress.

There are 435 Members of this body, and I suspect that every Member has at least one special interest group that they cannot say no to, and you put all 435 special interest groups together, and what do you get? You get budgets that have been historically, for a period of some 30 years now, over budget, out of balance.

So we take that deficit and place it over in the debt column at the end of every fiscal year, and that has grown progressively over the years, and our Keynesian friends historically said that was good, that that caused the economy to move, that that stimulated growth and all of that was worth the time and, most importantly, the burden of doing it. I think what they failed to recognize was the collective impact of what they were about.

The collective impact of what we do today in this Congress now says to the taxpayer on an annual basis that "you must fork up over a hundred billion dollars to pay the interest on the national debt," and the Government; this is, the Congress, must OK the borrowing of that money from the economy of this country to finance it.

What that now causes is such great competition in the marketplace as to who will get the dollar to spend that we have had those cyclical problems of high interest rates and inflation, and, of course, that which inevitably follows is unemployment.

We have an opportunity in this Congress in 1984 to do something profoundly substantial to change the course of our Government, to put in place what I believe is one of the single most valuable tools to begin to say to this Congress, "No, you can't be irresponsible any longer. You are going to have to look at your priorities."

It does not mean there will be massive cuts. It does mean we are going to have to be responsible, to bring revenues and expenditures into line, and we are asking you to spend only a portion of the gross national product of this country. And we are going to ask this Congress to run the Government that we are responsible for running like we run some 44 State governments in this Nation and as all citizens must run their households and their businesses, and that is to keep their expenditures in line.

I have to believe that the American public is right by a substantial majority, and that if the Congress itself does not have the backbone to do it, maybe then the public will force us to do it. Thank goodness, Thomas Jefferson during the construction of our Constitution had the insight and the wisdom to recognize that at some time and some place in our history Congress might not be willing to respond to the will of the people, and that the will of the people could be spoken through their State legislatures in forcing the Congress through the constitutional route to do something.

Now, I hope that we do not have to ask our States to do that. I hope that this Congress could be so responsible as to respond to its citizenry in a fiscal fashion that will solve the problems at hand. That is why discharge petition No. 10 is before this Congress, and I hope my colleagues will sign it in great numbers so that we can bring the issue to a debate on this floor, the issue of a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget and limit taxation.

I thank my colleagues this evening for joining in this most important colloquy, this important special order. There will be numerous special orders in the coming days addressing once again the issue of a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget. I know of no other issue and I think the American public recognizes no other issue as important today as bringing our deficits into control and bringing fiscal sanity once again into this Congress and into our Government. In large numbers they are saying today that the only way that is possible to do is to limit the great capacity of this body to spend by saying that "we will put you in the limits of a constitutional amendment which will say that expenditures and revenues must at some time certain be in balance."

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE NATIONAL DEBT AND THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have come here tonight to talk about the deficit and to talk about the national debt. We have heard a lot of rhetoric on this floor. Several of us are going to talk tonight about some of the facts.

Tonight we have heard discussion about who is to blame, blaming the people or blaming the Constitution or blaming Congresses and Congress as an institution. This is my second year here now. I am proud of this institution, and it strikes me that before we look at structure, we ought to look at policies, we ought to look at facts, and we ought to look at the programs that have been enacted in these last 4 years.

I do not think the problem has been an insatiable appetite. I think it has been misguided policies. It has been policies that were enacted in 1981 and 1982 by a majority of this institution, including those who spoke here tonight. They voted aye when the administration presented certain policies and certain proposals for diminished revenues and increased expenditures.

I think the issue of the national deficit and the national debt is so serious that it will not await the passage of a constitutional amendment. We are talking about 3, 4, or 5 years. The problem is here and now, and the time for action is not 3 years from now, 4 years from now, or 5 years from now.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this evening marks the first evening in a series of special orders that those of us who are Members of the freshman Democratic class will take to enter this empty Chamber, this quiet Chamber, and discuss issues and questions that face this Nation at this very critical time.

Certainly there is no greater issue that faces our country today than the size of the growing Federal deficit. That is the topic of this evening. During future evenings other issues will be discussed and engaged in by Members of the freshman Democratic class, issues from foreign affairs to the armed services and to the economy as a whole.

I think a real issue for the voters of this country in this important and critical election is in which direction this country is headed. Where will this Nation go? That is a question that has confronted the people of America for years, for generations, and for centuries. In 1862, Abraham Lincoln in his famous House Divided speech said, "If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending, we could better judge what to do and how to do it."

That truly is the issue that faces the American people in the summer and fall of 1984. Where are we going as a nation, and what role will this Congress and future Congresses play in the course of events that so trouble our country?

The issue that we want to discuss this evening in our special order is the crisis that our country faces because of this deficit. In 1979, then candidate Ronald Reagan campaigned very effectively around this Nation on the need to balance the Federal budget. And certainly we need to balance the budget of this country. At that time the deficit under President Jimmy Carter was $55 billion—an out-of-budget deficit if there ever was one—and Ronald Reagan use those numbers to Mr. Carter's defeat.

Tonight as we talk to the American people, the deficit approaches $200 billion, and to give you some type of idea or concept of where we are, where we are going, I think it is important to take a look at where we have been in terms of our deficits.

This chart that we have prepared, that was prepared by the Budget Committee for us, reflects budget deficits from the administration of the Truman years through what is projected to be the deficits of President Reagan through 1986. If you took each and every deficit of each and every administration, from the administration of George Washington through Jimmy Carter's administration and added them all together, they would fall short of the deficit that has literally quadrupled in such a short period of time.

You can see from the deficit quite frankly the last balanced budget we had was in 1967, during one of Lyndon Johnson's years, in 1968-69; but tonight as we speak, the deficit approaches $200 billion.

The Congressional Budget Office estimates that those deficits if they go unattended by the end of this decade could well be $300 billion. In Alice Rivlin's terms, deficits as far as the eye can see.

What are the consequences of these deficits? What does it mean to the American people, the small businessman that is trying to get a loan to keep his employees on the job, to the young homeowner, the young man right out of college trying to pay off the student loan program, to the blue-collar worker who has just gone back to work?

There are certainly signs of economic recovery in this country. Unemployment is down. Inflation is down, but if we are to have continued growth in our economy, certainly these deficits have to be controlled and their growth reversed.

Every time that interest rate, that prime rate, goes up only 1 percent, over a million people in this country are forced out of the home market. They simply cannot buy their first home. It is a staggering statistic, but a real one to a young family that is trying to purchase their first home in America today.

As surely as inflation is going down, interest rates are going up. If the deficit is not controlled, if it is not reversed in 1985, it may not matter who is President of this Nation when interest rates are soaring again.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. No; I will not yield. We have limited time this evening and a full schedule that our Members have elected to use to utilize our special order.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is not going to allow participation in this debate?

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. After I have finished making my statement, my presentation, then certainly we would be happy to yield.

I think what we really need to look at is in terms of trying to assess blame, to who is at fault, to assess blame at who is the person or the body that needs to do something about this problem. The truth is that there is enough blame to go around for everyone in this country. The budgets that President Ronald Reagan has submitted to this Congress in 1982 called for a deficit of $45 billion. For fiscal year 1983, the budget deficit that Ronald Reagan submitted called for a deficit of $92 billion. For fiscal year 1984, the deficit in the budget submitted by President Reagan was calling for a $189 billion deficit in his fiscal year 1984 budget proposals.

For fiscal year 1985, that budget calls for a deficit of $180 billion.

There are other results of these growing deficits. Business failures were 25 percent higher in 1983 than last year and 184 percent higher than during the Carter administration.

Farm foreclosures are double the 1982 rate, at the highest level in 1983 since the 1930's.

Loan delinquency rates have increased by one-third in just the last 12 months alone.

Staggering statistics, statistics that reflect no jobs, no growth, low productivity and absolutely no investment.

One thing surely that we have learned in the last few years is that the recovery that we have had has had no meaningful effect on the growth of these staggering deficits.

The real question I think tonight that we want to discuss in addition to the effect of where we are is what should we do. One proposal that I have been pleased to hear that our freshmen class has put forward is the proposal called pay as you go. Under that suggestion, for a Member of Congress to bring forth a new idea, a new program, he simply has to find the revenues to pay for it. He has to either go to another program or another source of funds or he has to convince this body that sufficient taxes should be raised to pay for that program.

I think that is a step in the right direction, a step toward putting us on a meaningful flight path toward a balanced budget, which is exactly where we need to be and where we have got to move this country.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman from Texas would yield back to me.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Surely.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman has so clearly outlined a couple points. One is the unprecedented nature of this deficit and that chart that the gentleman has presented so clearly states it, when people here talk about Congress as an institution or Government as an institution and point their finger there, they ignore the graphic illustration there that for a number of years we were able to substantially manage our affairs in this country. There were debts, there were deficits, sometimes too high and they were of serious concern, but in the last years they have gone up and then in the very last years they have gone up through the roof; so it is really passing the buck, I think the gentleman has shown so well, to lump all the last 40 or 50 years together and to say, "Ah, it's the institution of Congress or the Government."

Ironically, those who have spoken earlier tonight leave out any mention of the Chief Executive.

I also think the gentleman made a second point.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question? I do not mean to embarrass anyone.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. The gentleman does not embarrass us at all, but the gentleman had his day in court for many days. We want the court of the American people to hear our discussion.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield for just two short questions? I promise it will not take more than 30 seconds.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. All right, I will yield.

Mr. ROTH. We have 435 Members in this body. How many are Democrats and how many are Republicans?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Let me ask the gentleman, I think the majority are Democrats, but I would have to ask the gentleman what the vote was in 1981 and 1982 for the policies that helped to cause this. They were not the entire cause of this deficit. They were the major cause, and I want to go right now into the cause of this deficit.

Mr. ROTH. Maybe I can answer the question. It is 269 to 160 some.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. There is no question, but I have asked the gentleman who constituted the majority when these policies were enacted and I am now taking back my time so I can talk about that.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. No. I want to lay this out for the American people to hear and not be diverted.

Mr. WALKER. We are asking questions and we are not going to allow answers?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. People are getting the facts, not rhetoric, through our discussion, at least as we see them.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield? It is the taxpayers' debate.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Please, the gentleman knows the rules of the House. After we have finished our discussion, if there is ample time, we will be glad to yield back. We heard about 45 minutes of rhetoric here, uninterrupted on our side. We are determined to present the facts to the American people tonight. We are not going to be sidetracked by anything.

So I was saying to the gentleman from Texas that the gentleman also made a second point that was so important, and that is that what has happened is the opposite of the predictions that were made when the budgets were presented in 1981 and 1982. Instead of having a balanced budget, we have a historically unbalanced budget.

Instead of having a budget deficit as the President estimated of $22.8 billion in 1983, we had an actual deficit of $194 billion, which is what—eight times what was predicted and really pledged.

□ 2120

But I want to talk a bit, if I might, about the causes of this deficit because you cannot seek remedies unless one understands the causes of an illness. And figures can be complicated. But I suggest that one can understand this by jotting down a few figures, which I am going to do.

First of all on the outlay side, and here I use percentage of gross national product because I think it is the easiest way to understand it, and it takes into account inflation so we are using the same standard throughout, in 1970, and again I start with the outlay side, Social Security and medicare represented 3.8 percent of our GNP, the expenditure on Social Security and medicare. The estimated figures under the administration's budget for 1989 would be 6.6 percent. So there would be an increase of almost 3 percent of GNP outlaid for Social Security and medicare.

For defense, taking the 1980 figure, there was 5.2 percent of our GNP spent for national defense. The projection for 1989 would be 7.9 percent, an increase of almost 50 percent in terms of our GNP.

Interest on this deficit, the figure for interest in, 1970 was 1.5 percent. The projection for 1989 is 3.9 percent. In other words, a tripling of the amount we spend on GNP on liquidation or payment of interest.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for one short point?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. That is so interesting. And one of the saddest things about that statistic is that all of the budget cuts of 1981, all of the pain that we went through during this recession, and as a result of those budget cuts, the savings that were made are far less than the amount of money that we have had to pay on the interest on the national debt. So all the sacrifices that were made in those cuts of Gramm-Latta have all been eaten away by the dollars that we are now paying on the interest to the national debt.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. That is so true. If you then look at the fourth part of the outlay figure, in 1970, or you could take the 1980 figure, but in 1970 we were spending 7.4 percent of GNP on everything other than Social Security, defense, interest on our national budget, 7.4 percent in 1970. It went up to 10.1 percent in 1980. The projection for 1989 is that there will be a reduction to 6.8 percent of GNP spent again for everything other than Social Security, medicare, defense, and interest.

So with a projected reduction in all other categories, it is very clear what are the sources of this spiraling national debt, major sources: Social Security, medicare, defense, interest. Those are the major ones. We have to look also at the other programs, and I am the first to acknowledge that.

Now let us look at the revenue side. Social Security and medicare. In 1983 we passed a general Social Security bill. It provided for an increase in taxes so that by 1989 the estimate is that if medicare and Social Security take up 6.6 percent of GNP, 6.4 percent will be covered by revenues.

My feeling is that those figures probably are not completely accurate, that the medicare costs are going to increase more than expected. But still we have taken action within this Congress to shore up the deficit in terms of Social Security.

It is general revenues where there is a very substantial shortfall, because the estimate is that while in 1970 general revenues, general taxes took up 16.0 percent of GNP, by 1989 it would be reduced to 13.0, and each point of GNP involves billions of dollars.

Let me, therefore, spend just a few minutes talking about the general revenue side as we have now talked about the expenditure side, because it is absolutely clear that to get at this massive, growing malignancy of the national deficit within our Government and within our society there is going to have to be action on all sides, and those who peddle the single, simple answer are trying to mislead the American people.

In March 1981 when the new administration, the Reagan administration recommended a major tax cut they said that they would reduce revenues by over $690 billion from 1981 to 1986. But the eventual result, and this should be remembered by those who voted for it, was to reduce the deficit far below the revenues that came in, far below the levels that were projected by the administration. And if it were not for subsequent action within the Congress as finally approved by the President, the 1981 legislation would have caused revenues in 1986 to fall to only 17.3 percent of GNP rather than the administration's target of 19.5 percent, or a difference of nearly $100 billion.

So we have a spending-revenue mismatch, a grievous spending-revenue mismatch. When you take out Social Security from the picture, spending today exceeds revenues by 36 percent, by 36 percent.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. I think my friend from Michigan has made some excellent points. One thing that has come through very clear in those statistics is that you cannot balance this budget if you just look at the revenue side, any more than you can simply balance the budget if you take it all out of domestic spending, if you go to the medicare and medicaid and try to balance it that way, any more than you can balance it if you take all of the expenditures out of the defense budget.

It is almost like a three-legged stool we are dealing with in terms of trying to lick this problem. You have got to handle all three categories, revenues, slowing the growth of spending, curtailing, and modifying the growth of domestic spending, all at the same time in order to have a solution that is fair and a solution that genuinely puts us on a glidepath to a real balanced budget. You cannot do one without the other.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I agree so much.

In a word, we need, it seems to me, two major characteristics.

There has to be a balanced approach to balancing the budget and it has to come now, not 5 years from now, through a Constitutional Convention. The question really is not the past or it is not the present. The past and the present have set the stage for difficult issues in the future, and the real question before us and before the administration, and most importantly before the country, becomes not whether we are going to act on this deficit but how we are going to act and by whom. That is really the issue, as I see it.

Mr. MACKAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I will be glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACKAY. I am very pleased to be able to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Michigan. We are part of a group in the freshmen Democratic Caucus who have tried to do something about the budget deficits within the parameters of the existing framework of the budget process.

This year, in fact, we offered an across-the-board spending freeze and it was very interesting what happened when that proposal was presented to the House. In fact, it did not pass. It was supported no more strongly by the Republican Party than it was by the Democratic Party. It was not supported by the Reagan administration and yet it probably is going to end up being the way that this country finally faces the deficit crisis.

Why would our class, which is a cross-section of America, it has people from all sections of the country with all differing political philosophies, why would we see this as the way that this country has got to go?

For one thing, we are very upset with the big dificits. We are upset with the high interest rates, as you have very adequately pointed out.

□ 2130

We are upset with the trade deficits that have come about as a result of that. We do not like a budget process which holds neither party in the House accountable. We do not like a budget process and a political process which allows the President to be beating the drum for a balanced budget constitutional amendment, at the same time when he incredibly has offered a budget which is unbalanced to the tune of $180 billion, a budget which his own party refused to support in either House of the Congress.

I think it is important that people see this rhetoric in the proper context. Why would an across-the-board spending freeze work? We believe it would work because it is the same process that goes on every place else in the world where a people find that their expenditures have outrun their income and they find they have to make serious efforts to bring it back into balance.

It happens in our families, it happens in small businesses, it even happens in city and State governments. You simply freeze your expenditures until you get your revenues sufficiently to cover your outgoes. The people of America understand that.

If it is across the board and no one has any windfalls and everyone bears the pain equally, the people of America support that.

Perhaps the reason that this was not supported by the Republican administration, perhaps the reason that it was not supported in the House, is that it would force both the conservatives, who are seeking to increase spending in conservative areas, defense spending, and the liberals who are seeking to increase spending in areas which had been cut substantially, the social programs; it would force both ends of the political spectrum in America to realize that they have to accomplish their goals within the bounds of a balanced budget.

Now some day we are going to get there. And what we find today is a very noisy and sometimes strident debate about whether we should abandon the legislative process and get there by going outside the process to a constitutional amendment, in effect saying to the American people, "Please make us do what we do not have the courage to do" and frankly, that is true of both parties and the President.

What we are saying is we could do this now with the tools we have available. In fact, the budget conference is still not concluded. The question of across-the-board budget freeze is still available and could be adopted.

And as a show of good faith and one which would stand both the Republican and the Democratic Party in good stead, perhaps we should start out with an across-the-board freeze on expenditures coupled with the pay-as-you-go approach which the American people could understand.

All of us who have been home have talked about this with our constituents.

Based on my discussions with my constituents who I think are a cross section of American opinion, I believe they would support it, they would support their own programs being frozen, provided they knew everyone else's programs are frozen.

I think it would stand all of us in good stead, it would stand this institution in good stead if we paid more attention to what we could do now between now and the end of this session in a serious effort to begin reducing the deficit on the spending side than getting ourselves embroiled in debates about going outside the system and asking the people to demonstrate a degree of courage which the institution apparently is not willing to demonstrate.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. I think the gentleman has made two excellent points. The first of which, as I talked to people in my district in Texas, from the small businessman to the blue collar worker to the medical technician, they are concerned about interest rates in August 1984 and what interest rates are going to be in January 1985.

Even if a balanced budget amendment was added to the Constitution, we would not have it until the middle of the 1980's. That is not soon enough for the small businessman who is about to go under because of these enormous and growing deficits.

I think a second point the gentleman made is a good one. That is the fairness concept of the freeze, because it does treat everyone just alike, from the farmer who wants his subsidies to the medical researcher who wants their money for cancer research to the space program, which is a very important part of my district.

It tells everyone the same thing; we are all going to tighten our belt buckles, we are all going to sacrifice for a period of time, to get these interest rates down, to bring these deficits down and get to a genuine balanced budget which is exactly where we need to be.

Mr. MACKAY. I would submit that the American people probably are much further along in their thinking about this problem and their willingness to deal with it in the Congress than either party is willing to admit. In fact, the American people know that you could put a freeze on defense spending at levels which are modestly above the rate of inflation and we could continue to be strong without prejudicing our defense capability.

There is in fact a great deal of expenditure cuts which could be made. They also know that other programs could likewise be cut.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. If you yield again, defense is a perfect example. Some 29 to 30 percent of our expenditures are defense. It is the fastest growing area of the budget. There is no way we can balance the budget of this country without looking at the defense side of our expenditures.

We have got to find a way to slow the growth of defense. What I think we have had in this country is literally feast or famine when it comes to defense spending. The Soviets for the last 20 years have spent 4 to 5 percent in steady real-growth dollars every year on their defense budget; while we have gone up and down.

The space program is much the same way. In many programs that are very long range that need to be very visionary in their fruition, I think it is extremely important that we be consistent, that we be gradual, but that we find an increase, moderate enough so we can get this economy under control.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Let me just, if I might add, the discussion here about a freeze, I think, illustrates that the elected Representatives of the people are not without tools and should not pass the buck back to the people.

The three of us have voted at times for different approaches to the deficit, often the same way, sometimes differently.

Each of us has voted for an approach considerably beyond that in terms of deficit reduction proposed by this administration. And it would be dishonest, our having voted for action, to get up here and say the answer is a discharge petition. The answer is not there with the discharge petition; it is not in the stars; the problem lies mainly within policies crafted by people elected by the people of this country.

If they made mistakes, they are answerable to the people of this country. We have an election coming in a few months. It is there where there is the arena to discuss the past, to discuss the present and most importantly to discuss what the future should hold and with whom should be lodged the trust of acting on these serious problems.

Now, I want to underline a point. I come from Michigan, I am proud to have been born there, raised there, practiced law there, seen Michigan through its up and through its downs. I know there is some sort of a recovery in Michigan.

But we in Michigan have the greatest stake in a sound, solid recovery, because when the recovery falls through we are the ones who are most victimized traditionally. And I think because of the domestic deficit, I think because of the trade deficit mentioned by the gentleman from Florida and, I think, the gentleman from Texas, the trade deficit of over $100 billion, because of the international debt situation we have already seen how shaky one large bank can turn out to be and how it can shake or threaten to shake the financial structure of this country.

I think because of the domestic deficit, our trade deficit, and the whole international debt scene that the present recovery is not even built on sand, as weak as that kind of a foundation is. And it is not even built on quicksand, as perilous a base as that is for any structure. But it is really built on dynamite. It is built on dynamite that is likely to explode, that has a time bomb. It is getting worse and worse and worse.

I am proud to have been associated in this House with the two gentlemen here, who have helped to lead the battle, and who are not pointing fingers back home and who are not pointing fingers up in the sky, but who are saying, "Look, we have a serious, serious problem and it is up to the elected people in this House and in the Senate and in the White House to do what is right and to take this problem by the back of the neck and not pass the buck."

That has been the purpose of this special order. I have been happy to have participated in it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. If the gentleman will yield further, I think our freshman class has made a lot of progress. There have been some frustrations. I know that when I first got here I was chagrined by the seniority system, only to be told by an older Member to just stick around and the longer I was here the better I would like it. It has been frustrating.

But I think also it has been very rewarding, because I think our class has made progress. I think we are trying to deal responsibly with this deficit. None of us knows all the answers to the solution of this growing monster that is the Federal deficit. But surely all of us are trying to deal with it in a responsible way, to get ourselves ready for the next Congress to deal in a manner that can reduce these huge red lines and get us back in the direction I think our country needs to go.

Mr. MACKAY. If the gentleman will yield, I believe the gentleman has just put his finger on what is probably the correct way for the American people to really look at what is happening up here. In fact, there is now a conference committee on the budget. The conference committee theoretically is trying to reconcile differences between a House deficit reduction proposal and a Senate deficit reduction proposal and everything is reconciled except the question of the defense budget. That, it turns out, is nonnegotiable.

So, at the same time we are saying we would like to balance the budget, we are also saying but we are going to balance it only if it can be done without any reduction at all in one side's view of what should be done in defense spending.

I think the American people need to understand that and if they do they will understand that there is a great deal of talk, that some people are not really seriously thinking about what could be done between now and November.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Let me just add, if I might, that the belligerence of the administration in terms of defense expenditures, we want a strong defense but not a wasteful one, is really especially ironic when you look at the domestic spending side.

Domestic spending—this is other than Social Security—has been the subject of major cuts of about $50 billion a year in programs like education and food stamps and women, infants, and children nutrition programs. I think it is to the credit of a good number of Members within this House who said that they are willing to take a look at everything, remembering issues of fairness and equity, but to look at everything. Nothing is absolutely sacred.

We took a look at Social Security. We voted for increased burdens and for some reduced benefits, putting them together in order to save the integrity of that system.

For now when we need a budget resolution, when it has passed through the House, when it went through the Senate and it is in conference committee, for there to be stonewalling because of obstinacy on the point of defense spending, I think, does a terrible disservice to fiscal responsibility and soundness in this country.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. If the gentleman will yield further, I think, in conclusion, this debate tonight and discussion has been a healthly one.

The purpose of these special orders is to engage our freshman class in talking about the issues that face the Nation. I think we have made the first step tonight. I look forward to, in the coming evenings, to hear other Members of our class coming forward to talk about issues that are important to them.

The truth is the American will see through the rhetoric and the shrill voices in this House. The answers to this country, especially on the economic front, are difficult and they are tough and they are complicated and there is no quick easy panacea solution that is going to solve our problems before November's election, not to reduce these deficits, not to lick this monster.

I think tonight we have made one small step toward discussing some solutions and looking at the problem, hopefully in a responsible way toward moving toward the ultimate solution.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I thank him for yielding because I do not think you can have a healthy discussion if it is just one sided. I would say to the gentleman who mentioned earlier that they sat while we had a discussion. On virtually every discussion we have had out here, when someone has come to the floor and asked to be yielded to, we have done it. We have wanted a healthy two-way discussion.

I would suggest for the future discussions you are going to have out there I guarantee you some of us will be here. I would hope that we would have a pattern where you would yield to us so that we can in fact have a real debate about some of these issues and so that some of the one-sided nature of them does not mislead the American people.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I will take back my time, if I might, because I want to comment on that.

We have taken this time today because we think it is useful to lay out the facts to the American people. This is not a forum where we are essentially trying or should use this as an arena for the 1984 campaign.

We can all go back and should go back to our districts and do that.

We are here today primarily to present to the people the facts. We sat through about 45 minutes of discussion that the two of you participated in——

Mr. WALKER. And the gentleman did not ask us to yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Because we think that you should be able to make your case and now we are making ours. The public can compare our two cases.

We have talked about the balanced budget amendment in essence and we have stated why we think the time if not now is next year, not 4 or 5 years from now. It is all printed in the RECORD. The people of this country can obtain the RECORD and if they do not have easy access they can write us and obtain a copy of it. So they can see the case that has been made out on the gentleman's side as of an hour ago and the case that the three of us have made out trying to, as much as we can, adhere to what the facts and policies have been.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I realize he is a very accomplished lawyer and is mentally very acute and I appreciate his taking this time for his special order.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I am a legislator, not a lawyer. I am a legislator.

Mr. ROTH. I realize that, but you are a lawyer as you had mentioned before in Michigan.

The point is I would like to ask this question. Of the 435 Congressmen, how many are Democrats and how many are Republicans?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Well, we have already discussed that.

Mr. ROTH. Please answer that simple question.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I am. I have answered it and you have answered it. What I have said to the gentleman is look at the facts, look at the policies, look at the debt, look at the chart. Mr. ANDREWS has presented a chart. I am not sure it comes through in color to you or to whoever out there is looking at it.

Mr. ROTH. I am color blind. But how many are Democrats of the 435?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. We have already discussed that.

Let me just finish.

Look at the chart and look what has happened to the national debt beginning 1981 and 1982 and I have said to the gentleman look at the policies and programs and look to see who was basically responsible, who proposed those policies, who proposed those programs.

Mr. ROTH. My friend, you are blowing smoke.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. And the answer is that while the debt is not entirely the blame of any single administration, far more than 50 percent of the present national debt is a result of the policies of the Reagan administration, is the result of programs that were proposed by a Republican President and that were passed with the majority of Republicans, with most of the votes coming from the Republican side.

□ 2150

So those are the facts. There is no use in taking 271 here versus so many here. You have to look at who voted for which policies. Who voted for which policies and what have been the results of those policies. I think the answer is very clear: The policies were enacted through the initiation of this administration, with the majority of the votes coming from your side; you have to bear the responsibility for your proposals and for your votes.

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconin.

Mr. ROTH. How many Democrats do we have in this House out of 435?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. You have already answered it.

Mr. ROTH. How many do we have; would you answer it for me?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. You have already answered it, sir.

Mr. ROTH. If you will be kind enough to yield me 15 seconds, 269 Democrats; 166 Republicans, and the President of the United States cannot spend 1 cent or buy one wooden pencil without the approval of this Congress.

If you want a balanced budget, why do you not vote for it right now; you have got the votes.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I will tell you, the answer is that we in this House, through a majority vote of Democrats, presented a budget that was below the President's request in terms of the deficit.

I was part of an administration, and I want to close with this——

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. No, I want to talk about 269. I was part of an administration, I was part of the Carter administration form 1977 to 1981. One of the most misunderstood points about the legislative process is that the key player in the legislative process is the Executive. I know this from the State legislative days of mine, when I was there and I ran for Governor. I saw the power of the Executive. The Executive proposes; the Executive is an intimate part of the legislative process after he or she proposes, and the Executive is an intimate part of the legislative process through the power of the vote.

I think it is a total misshaping of the American constitutional system to try to draw a wall between the Executive and the Congress and to say it is the Congress who spends the money. Oh, no. The administration proposes, whether it is Democratic or Republican. The administration participates in the committee processes and in active lobbying within these Houses, and then the Executive has the greatest power that any single person really has in terms of the legislative process, and that is the veto.

The American people are going to hold each and everyone of us responsible for our actions beginning in 1981 in terms of this administration. They are not going to allow either of you or the President of the United States to say, ahh, 269 Democrats, do not blame me, I am not part of it.

The President, those are his proposals those are his results. We are going to talk about them, not only in terms of the past and the present, but Mr. Speaker, in terms of the future, because the real question is, who can best be trusted, in terms of past record, to handle this immense problem that is not around the corner, but is really with us today.

I think the record is clear as to who should be entrusted with that responsibility, but that is for another time. We, today, wanted to underline the depth of this problem, the urgency of the problem, the causes of these problems, and indicate that we three and many others, our colleagues, have been ready to face up to this issue, both new Members and oldtimers, and we continue ready to, and if it is not this year, Mr. Speaker, it is going to be the next year.

I yield back the balance of my time.

POLAND'S HELSINKI LEGACY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, today I join my fellow Helsinki Commissioners in marking the Helsinki accords' ninth anniversary.

This document was signed by the 35 participating nations on August 1, 1975, thereby binding these nations together in a joint effort to resolve the humanitarian, economic, political, and military issues that divide Europe. I would like to focus the attention of my colleagues this evening, Mr. Speaker, on the special meaning this document has held for the people of Poland.

For Edward Gierek, the party's first secretary who signed the Final Act for Poland 9 years ago, the accords were an expression of and justification for his détente policy—a means by which to stimulate Poland's economy through infusions of Western loans, credits, and technology. Gierek's failure to institute long-needed systemic reforms instead resulted in an insupportable foreign debt, domestic austerity, and deepening popular discontent.

But, the plethora of democratic opposition groups throughout Poland found inspiration and hope in the Helsinki accords' promise of a freer flow of ideas, information, and people across Poland's borders. And, the Final Act's declaration that "civil, political, economic, social, cultural, and other rights and freedoms derive from the inherent dignity of the human person and are essential for his full and free development" struck a highly responsive chord in the heightened Polish social conscience.

Mr. Speaker, in late 1979, Poland's first open opposition group, the Workers' Defense Committee, KOR, organized a Helsinki monitoring committee, which soon established contacts with Charter '77 in Czechoslovakia and the Helsinki monitoring groups in the Soviet Union. The Polish committee also undertook the preparation of a detailed report on human and civil rights violations in Poland for submission to the upcoming Madrid meeting of the Helsinki signatory states.

The societal problems prophetically described in the Helsinki report were the underlying causes of the strikes that spread throughout the country in the summer of 1980, culminating in the birth of Solidarity and the historic Gdansk, Szczecin, and Jastrzebie-Zdroj agreements. KOR monitors served as advisers to the strike committees. Not coincidentally, one of the workers' strike demands was that the Helsinki agreement be republished and made readily available to the Polish people. During the ensuing period of renewal under Solidarity, the Helsinki committee continued to function under the aegis of the free union's Information and Consultation Center on Matters of Repression.

Mr. Speaker, the imposition of martial law in December 1981 struck the most devastating blow to the people of a Helsinki signatory country since the Final Act's signing. The crackdown in Poland had come 1 year into the Madrid meeting. Western delegations to the conference recognized that the integrity of the entire Helsinki process was at stake. After all, Solidarity Poland had been, in the words of U.S. Ambassador Kampleman, "a living demonstration of the vitality of the process launched at Helsinki." For the next 2 years in Madrid, a united West condemned continuing violations of the Helsinki accords in Poland, successfully introducing new commitments concerning trade union freedoms and other rights into the meeting's concluding document.

Meanwhile, as four of the original KOR Helsinki monitors—Jacek Kuron, Adam Michnik, Henryk Wujek, and Zbigniew Romaszewski—languished in prison awaiting trail for subversion, a new Helsinki committee announced its formation in Poland and began regularly to publish articles in the underground press. In March 1983, the new Helsinki committee produced an extensive report for presentation to the Madrid meeting. This remarkable 600-page document meticulously describes human and civil rights violations commited during the first year of martial law. The committee has since issued three more major reports documenting continuing rights violations by the Jaruzelski regime.

In the last few weeks, Mr. Speaker, Poland's original Helsinki monitors were put on trial only to have the proceedings suspended in light of the sweeping, but highly conditional, amnesty declared on July 21. Had the trial gone forward, the four KOR defendants were prepared to use the dock as a platform from which to indict the Jaruzelski regime for its violation of the fundamental rights and freedoms of the Polish people. In responding cautiously to the amnesty, the U.S. Government has been wise to recognize that the prisoners who are to be released will return to a society that itself remains unfree.

Mr. Speaker, as we have seen, throughout the social upheaval and grim repression of recent years, Polish human rights activists have struggled to preserve their Helsinki legacy and defend the human and civil rights of their people. They press on. We can do no less.

IN TRIBUTE TO FRED WARING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MCDADE. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week our Nation lost one of its greatest natural resources.

I speak of Fred Waring, a great musical talent who, with his Pennsylvanians, kept America singing and humming for nearly seven decades.

I particularly feel the loss because Fred Waring lived in my district of Pennsylvania, at Shawnee-On-Delaware.

He died on Sunday at Geisinger Medical Center in Danville, PA, just 48 hours after leading 200 teenagers in a concert at Penn State University, his alma mater. The concert at Penn State capped a 2-week series of musical workshops and, in the finale, his Pennsylvanians joined the teenagers in singing "My America," a song he wrote in 1976.

Fred Waring's achievements are legion and his contributions to our Nation are great. He had a passion for folk music and during World War II, he wrote songs that made all of us proud to be Americans. It is altogether fitting that he was awarded the Congressional Gold Medal by President Reagan, our highest civilian honor. I am proud to say that I was the chief cosponsor of the bill that made the award possible.

Fred was generous with his time and we, the members of the Pennsylvania delegation, were honored to have him with us here in Washington when we marked Pennsylvania Day.

During the course of his 84 years, Fred had many "firsts" in the musical field, ranging from appearances in Hollywood's first talking pictures to the recording of the first electronic album.

Fred's music crossed the lines of generations and Americans never lost their fondness for it despite the many trends in the field that came over the decades.

Critic John Crosby probably said it best when he wrote that Fred "always had a passion for folk music, not only our own, but that of every other nation; his special gift has been the ability to make folk music more comprehensible and, more importantly, palatable."

My deepest sympathy goes out to his wife, Virginia, and his four children.●

WILLINGNESS TO DEBATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I really had not decided to take the time this evening until we went through a charade here where we had an explanation that could not stand debate, and so therefore, I think maybe some rebuttal time might be in order. I only wish that we could keep the chart here on the floor that we have been referring to, and that the gentlemen, instead of leaving the Chamber now, maybe the wide-angle lens would catch them, would stay here and debate some of these points. I am perfectly willing to debate.

I think it is important that we understand that the healthy part of the process is the debate that takes place here so that the people can really understand the issue. I think it is a shame to have it suggested that we should not debate here in the House of Representatives, but rather, should wait and debate back in our districts. Well, we all know of course that when we go back to our districts we control the debate in our districts. As incumbent Members of Congress, that is the easy way to debate, that is to go back to where you really do not have to face the people who really know the subject.

What we heard here tonight is people who are not confident enough of their own position that they are really willing to engage in debate over that position. They have left the Chamber; the wide-angle lens will show that they have left the Chamber instead of participating in a debate on the things that they had to say.

They have learned their lesson well, I must say. They have only been here a few months, and they have learned their lesson well, because this is precisely the way this House is operated by the Democratic majority. Keep us from debating the issues of substance to the American people. Make certain that we bury them, make certain that we hide. When we do engage in debate, only do so on our own terms, and then run away.

I would submit that what you heard from the gentlemen who claimed to have all of the answers to the national deficits problems and so on, was some of the biggest bunch of hokum I have ever heard in my life. If that is what they are going to try to sell out on the campaign trail this year, I look forward to it. I think we will eat them alive out there this year. I think the challengers that the Republican Party will have on the campaign trail will glory in answering some of the things that we heard on the floor this evening. I think maybe we ought to deal with them.

Let us deal, first of all, with those nice deficits you saw on the chart. You know, they love to come out here on the floor, and we have seen those charts before with all the deficit figures, and it runs from about the Truman administration right up through Reagan. I think the American people need to ask one simple question: How do deficits happen? Deficits happen because of spending. You cannot accumulate deficits unless you spend the money. Every American family knows that. The way the American families run up debt is by spending money. That is the way government ends up running up debt, by spending money.

When you look at their chart, look at all those years on their chart where deficits were accumulated, and it was not just in the Reagan administration they were accumulated; you noticed that chart showed a whole bunch of years where those deficits were building and building and adding more and more and more. Where were they coming from? The were coming from a Democratic House of Representatives.

On all of those years, there were only 4 years out of the entire spectrum they showed there of 40 years where there were Republicans in charge of this House of Representatives. Why is that important? Because as the gentleman from Wisconsin pointed out a couple of minutes ago, you cannot spend one dime in the executive branch unless the spending starts here. This is where the spending starts.

When people elect Representatives to the House of Representatives, they elect them with one principal constitutional duty, and that is to appropriate the money that runs the Government.

□ 2200

It has to go through the other body. It has to go to the Executive. There are a lot of steps, but this is where it starts. This is where spending starts. When you set policy on spending, and I would agree with the gentlemen on the other side that policy is the important thing, policy is set on spending in this body; no other place.

We have the choice of rejecting out of hand any proposal that the administration sends up here for spending, and we do it regularly. The only problem is, usually what we do is like we did today on the supplemental appropriation when we rejected out of hand spending that the administration wants. We simply substitute a bunch of spending that we want, and that adds up to deficits.

We heard a lot of talk from them about the fact that they are representing views that they think have stature in the American public, and I think there is some feeling on their part that that is, in fact, the case, but then they reject out of hand the balanced budget. Eighty-three percent of the American people want the balanced budget amendment. How in the world can they say that they are in tune with the American people when they understand that 83 percent of the American people want the balanced budget amendment and they reject that as one of the directions to go.

They say—what was the term that they used? They said elected Representatives are not without tools to do something about balanced budgets without going to the constitutional amendment. That was one of the statements made. That is true. That is absolutely right. The trouble is that elected Representatives, as reflected in this House over 40 years of Democratic control, are without the courage to use those tools. The tools are there, but there is no discipline whatsoever to use the tools.

That is what the constitutional amendment is all about. It is a fiscal device to enhance discipline. It has little or nothing to do with making the decisions about policy except that it says that those policy decisions have to be made within the framework of spending the same amount that you take in and not doing it by raising taxes.

So what they had to say on the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is hokum. It disturbs me that they were not willing to stand by and explain what it was they meant, or were not willing to yield during the time that they were saying it so that we could get some explanation of what it was that they meant.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think what the gentleman is saying is right on target, but I think our friends on the other side of the aisle realize the problem. In fact, their standard bearer, Walter Mondale, in his acceptance address at the Democratic Convention said what in his opening remarks? He asked a question. "We lost 4 years ago. Why? Because we did not listen to the American people."

Then he said, "Here are the things we are going to do," and it pretty well parrots what the man who won the election 4 years was saying. So I think they know their problem.

But there is a deeper problem here. In our constitutional system, we have always had the checks and balances, but we have not really had a check and balance in this House. I think, and my friend from Pennsylvania will agree, that for 30 years now we had one-party rule in this House. Basically, we have not changed our Government in 30 years. When you have a government that is in power, and certain principles in power, for 30 years things become stagnant and things do not work. I think you have to have new infusion, new blood into the system.

The American people have elected various Presidents, but we have never changed the makeup of this House. We have always had the same Speaker, the same-party Speaker in this House for 30 years. Every chairman, every subcommittee chairman, has been a Democrat for 30 years.

I think if you are going to change this Government, forgive me, but you are going to have to change the makeup of the leadership of this House.

Mr. WALKER. I do not know about the gentleman, but I was in sixth grade when the Democrats took over the House of Representatives, and they have been in control ever since. I was in sixth grade when control switched over to the Democratic Party, and they have been in control ever since. Ever since that time, we have had economic problem after economic problem. We have had bust and boom throughout, and yet they all want to say, "Do not blame us." Well, who else do the American people blame?

We have a consistent record of who had the votes to change the policy and who is responsible for the policy. So I think the gentleman makes an excellent point.

Mr. ROTH. If the gentleman will yield further, I think we understand the problem here, but the thing I am wrestling with is this: I am a father of 3 young children. I am concerned about where this country is going. We have a national debt now of $1 trillion 480 billion. The interest on our national debt pretty soon is going to be the highest item in our budget. It is the third highest item in the budget now.

We have got to make some changes.

Mr. WALKER. I agree.

Mr. ROTH. Blowing smoke and rhetoric is not going to do the job. I think what we are going to have to do is to have these people who are running for the various congressional seats around the country come to Washington and take a course in what is going on here and then send them back into the precincts. If we do that, then we can change the makeup of this House, and before we change the makeup of this House, I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I must say we are not going to have the changes that we need. It is really that simple. I am concerned about where this country is going.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is right.

Mr. ROTH. I am concerned about our future generation.

Mr. WALKER. I think there are a lot of people who share the gentleman's point of view, and I would point out to the people on the other side who suggested earlier that we were pointing fingers at the American people and blaming them for the problem we are in, once again, that just is not true. We are pointing the finger right here. We are saying, "Right here is the problem." It is an institutional problem, and it is just an absolutely philosophical problem.

These are people who like to spend and tax, and until you rid this place of a majority of Representatives who like to spend and tax, you are going to continue to have massive deficit problems regardless of who you put in the White House.

Mr. ROTH. If the gentleman will yield further, Benjamin Franklin was supposed to have said at one time that if you hear a debate, then you get some idea of where the truth lies.

Why do we not do this? When our friends on the other side of the aisle come and explain their budget proposals and why we have the deficit, why do we not come and have good give-and-take debate at the time. Let the American people decide where the facts lie.

After all, this Government does not belong to the President. This Government does not belong to us in this Chamber. This Government does not belong to the bureaucracy. This Government belongs to the people of this country, and I think if we had a good, spirited debate, a good give-and-take, I think the American people could draw their own conclusions. That is what we should do.

Mr. WALKER. I agree with the gentleman. I think that is what we need out here, and not a debate that is controlled by the Speaker in such a way as to make certain that he gets the last word all the time whenever we have these budget debates, and that we always end up with something less than a satisfactory vote on a lot of items that many of us would like to see voted on in those budget bills.

Let us come out here on the floor and let us debate these issues. Let us not just shut off the debate and walk out of the Chamber. That to me says something in and of itself. I would say to the rest of my colleagues, I would say to the gentlemen who were here earlier, I would say to the country at large, I am perfectly willing to submit my views to the crucible of public debate, to have them challenged, and to challenge others on their views. I am perfectly willing to come to this floor and do that anytime.

Now, where is the other side? Are they willing to do the same? We do not see them out here. When that camera pans this Chamber right now, there are no Democratic Members of the House here, save the one who occupies the chair. That is a problem. That is a problem, because what we heard in this one-sided debate earlier, as I say, was a voice of complete unreality.

For example, they criticized the policies enacted in 1981. Let us understand what took place when we changed the economic policy of this country in 1981. If they were not for doing that in 1981, let us understand and what they were for. One of the gentleman identified himself as having been an official in the administration that preceded this new administration, the Reagan administration. Let us understand what that administration had given us by 1981: 21½ percent interest rates; 13 percent inflation; 7½ percent unemployment. This economy was in disastrous shape.

This administration came along and said what we need to do in order to get investment going again in the country, get the economy moving again, is to cut the tax rates on individual Americans so that they will have more money to invest. Sure enough, what we have produced is an investment-led recovery that was said by the gloom-and-doom Democrats that we heard earlier this evening to be a recovery without substance. Well, it is only the strongest recovery since World War II. It only is producing growth rates that are unparalleled in the history since World War II, that are astounding the economists, that are showing precisely what we said would happen is happening, that in fact you have an economic boom precipitated by people who are able to save a little bit more and, therefore, invest a little bit more toward their own futures.

That is what is happening, and one of the gentlemen even made the statement that this recovery has had no marked impact on the deficit. Where in the world does that come from?

If we look back at the debate that took place last year about what the deficits were likely to be this year, we heard a lot of talk at that point about the fact that we were going to have $200 billion deficits. The present revenue projections would seem to show that the deficit this year is not going to be $200 billion. It is going to be $160 billion, which is still way too high. It is totally unacceptable, but the difference is not in anything we have done around here. We have spent ourselves blind around here. The difference in those deficit figures comes from growth. It is the growth of the economy. It is the increased revenues coming into the economy as the result of growth that is having that kind of impact.

I would submit that there is nothing we have done around here that has produced a $40 billion impact in 1 year. Growth has. Recovery has.

I would suggest that if you continue to permit the economy to recover at the rate it has been recovering that you will produce such growth that you will have a marked effect on bringing down deficits.

In fact, statistics would show that if you have a 6-percent growth rate, which is below what the present growth rate is, if you have a 6-percent growth rate over a period of years, you can allow the Federal budget to grow at 3 percent and still within a period of 7 years collapse the deficit to a balanced budget.

Now, understand what I said there. If you permit growth in the economy that permits 6-percent growth, you can still have 3-percent growth in the total Federal budget yearly and get to a balanced budget without cutting any programs.

Now, contrast that with what we heard from the Democrats a little while ago. They propose a freeze budget. I am not suggesting a freeze budget. I am suggesting you can have 3 percent growth in the budget.

Which is better, to freeze social security recipients, as they would propose to do, or to allow them a 3-percent growth in their meager incomes?

What is better, to freeze defense and not have any defense strength, to undermine defense strength, or to allow 3-percent growth so that you can increase a little bit?

What is better, to freeze the education expenditures of this country or to allow a 3-percent growth?

I would submit that some nominal growth is better, rather than the freeze concept that they came up with.

Understand, they are talking about freezing social security, defense, education, all these good things that we so often hear about out on the floor, they are talking about freezing those, period.

I am talking about a process that allows them to grow nominally, but yet does so in a way that you get to a balanced budget.

But my premise is that you have to allow economic growth to continue. You cannot have economic growth if you do what Walter Mondale wants to do and what they evidently want to do, and that is tax the recovery away, because mind you, that is what they talk about. When they criticize the policies of 1981, they are really criticizing the tax cuts. Without the tax cuts and without relief for the American people, you cannot have growth. We will go right back to negative growth, just where we were in the Carter administration when we tried to tax our way to economic betterment. That is what they are proposing.

They are proposing going back to the economic policies of the Carter administration, which we all know and loved.

Now, I think you ought to contrast those things. I think that you ought to understand that this is the new wave of Democrats that were out on the floor here tonight. This is the new group that came here fresh, that had all kinds of good ideas to contribute to the system to make the country better, to end those deficits that they talk so much about, all that red ink, and that is their solution. Their solution is to go back to the Carter administration policies, which were an unmitigated disaster.

There are better ways of approaching this and there are better ways that involve the growth of the economy that this administration has moved forward and some of us on the minority side have tried to move forward.

We also heard the rather absurd contention here this evening that a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution would have no impact on interest rates. Interest rates are based upon long-term expectations. One of the main things that goes into figuring what they are going to charge for interest today is what they expect the future to produce. If investors across the country were certain that the Federal Government was going to get its fiscal house in order and do something toward balancing the budget, that would make it a lot easier for them to decide that in fact inflation was going to stay down, that investment was going to stay up, and so therefore interest rates could be brought down. It would have an impact on interest rates in this country, so it is important from that aspect; but it is also rather ridiculous to talk about interest rates and not also mention the fact that what this country really needs is honest money. We have dishonest money in the country at the present time, largely because of the actions of this body, largely because of the deficits this body has piled up, and largely because we have an unfettered Federal Reserve that is not basing its money on any kind of real standard.

What happened to the stock market the other day when it went up right after Paul Volcker made the statement that he was not going to tighten up the economy and therefore raise interest rates. That has nothing to do with the deficit. That was Paul Volcker making an arbitrary decision and the stock market shot up.

What we have got in this country is a Volcker standard at the present time, and yet we hear nothing, no talk on the other side about reforming monetary policy as a way to assure a better future for America. We hear nothing from them about honest money.

Why? Because basically the Democratic Party is committed to inflation. The way in which they are going to finance a lot of these things that they do not finance through taxes is they are going to finance them through inflation. They are an inflationary party. They want to go back to the double digit inflation of the Carter administration because at that point Government revenues were growing falsely with dishonest money; but nevertheless, they had revenues growing that then could be used to finance all kinds of new social programs. That was the built-in mechanism that Lyndon Johnson left us with.

I would submit that the day for that should be long passed, that what the American people want is a stable economy. They want interest rates brought down with honest money, with proper fiscal policy and that is what we can move toward if in fact we would change some of the personalities around here who make the decisions.

Finally, we heard the statement made, "Let's wait until the next Congress. We don't want this balanced budget now. That would be too far off.

What we need is action right away. We need action in the next Congress."

Why the next Congress? Why not take action right now? Why are we not voting to cut the budget on the floor right now? We have got appropriation bills coming through here all the time. A number of us have been offering to cut those appropriation bills. We have been making the tough decisions, the tough decisions they claim the administration is unwilling to make to get us toward a balance budget.

I do not suggest that anything we have offered on the floor would get us a balanced budget, but it sure would have got us closer, and virtually every one of those votes where it has been defeated, and there have been a couple minor exceptions, that virtually every one that has been defeated, the overwhelming number of votes against them has come from the Democratic party. It is they that are voting to spend, rather than to save, and then having the nerve to turn around to Ronald Reagan after thay have voted that way and say, "Aha, our spending doesn't matter. It is our deficit."

Anybody who runs their own family budget knows that that is ridiculous. I think the American people are going to make the determination this year that that is ridiculous.

It is also important to understand what happened earlier in this Congress and it would be interesting to know where the votes lay from the gentleman who talked so glowingly here this evening on the issue of whether or not we were going to waive the whole Budget Act.

Remember there was a lot of discussion among them about the Budget Act and how that was a control mechanism, it has gotten over to the Senate, it has gotten hung up on defense spending and all of that? Well, I would say to them, who cares? We voted here in this House a few weeks ago to waive the Budget Act anyhow. We said when it came to spending the money in the appropriation bill, the Budget Act had no meaning to us whatsoever, we are waiving it.

We voted that way right out here on the House floor. I wonder how they voted. Did they vote to waive the Budget Act or did they vote to keep it in effect? I do not know. I have not had a chance to check the record, but I would think their constituents might want to check the record on that and find out whether or not they voted to waive the Budget Act at that point when it came to actually spending the money, as compared to telling the American people what our intent was.

□ 2220

The fact is we have violated the intent of the budget on occasion after occasion after occasion.

The gentleman from Minnesota, BILL FRENZEL, came to the floor today with a cut amendment to the Labor-HHS appropriation that was aimed at bringing that budget or bringing that appropriation in line with the budget. It got defeated overwhelmingly, primarily with Democratic votes.

I think that we have not heard the full story here tonight. I am sorry we have not. I would much prefer to carry on this discussion not with myself and not with the gentleman from Wisconsin, much as I like him. I think it would have been very, very useful to have this discussion carried on and let the Democratic freshmen who were here on the floor challenge what I just said. Let them come to the floor and challenge what I just said. That is fine with me. It would be very useful for them to do that. I would love it. I would love to debate the facts and figures with them.

I would love to ask them where they are going to get enough taxes to balance the budget because we all know that in order to tax enough to balance the budget you have literally got to confiscate every penny of income in this country over $26,000 a year.

I would like them to explain how that is going to protect the average middle income person in this country. I would like to hear it.

I would like to have that kind of debate. But let us make it a real debate. Let us not make it a one-sided debate where I get up and present my case; they get up and present their case. Let us yield to each other.

I would say for the future I am perfectly willing to yield. I am perfectly willing to carry on the debate because I think it is healthy for the country.

I would hope the Democrats would do the same.

I yield back the balance of my time.

VICTIMS OF CRIME ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, we are today introducing legislation to provide Federal grants to States for crime victim compensation and assistance.

Earlier in the Congress, I introduced H.R. 2978 and later H.R. 5124. The first represented an early effort by Senator HEINZ, and I testified on the bill before the House Subcommittee on Criminal Justice. The latter bill was introduced on behalf of the administration and represented its proposed victim assistance program.

The bill Congressman GEKAS and I are introducing today is that core portion of S. 2423—as reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee—which deals with Federal assistance to States for victim programs. This bill does not include titles III, IV, and V of the bill because they are outside of the scope of legislation now being considered by the House Criminal Justice Subcommittee and could conceivably inject new issues at a time when that subcommittee is nearing markup.

This proposed legislation represents a bipartisan effort of the Senate in considering the administration's crime victim legislation. The bill differs in some respects with the administration's original bill. For example, it offers State victim compensation programs a larger matching Federal grant—25 percent as opposed to 10 percent; creates a so-called spillover mechanism so that unspent money earmarked either for compensation or assistance can be used for the other purpose in the event of an excess, and finally, the bill provides a slightly different allocation between victim compensation and assistance.

Although the bill represents a more costly program than H.R. 5124, it provides additional funding through the creation of a special penalty assessment against those convicted of Federal crimes. Moreover, it sets a $100 million cap on the crime victims' assistance fund.

I think this bipartisan bill moves toward a final resolution of the many policy questions which the Congress has considered for many years. It represents a step in the direction recommended by the President's Task Force on Victims of Crime. This bill, I feel, can and will serve as an excellent vehicle for carrying the concept of victim aid into reality.●

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE POLISH WARSAW UPRISING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the Polish Home Army's courageous uprising against the Nazi forces in Warsaw at the end of World War II. It was on this date, August 1, 1944, that Lt. Gen. Tadeusz Bor-Komorowski, Commander-in-Chief of the Polish Home Army, gave the orders to begin the revolt against Nazi forces occupying the Polish capital.

General Bor-Komorowski timed the uprising to occur just as the Russians were approaching the gates of Warsaw, anticipating that the Red Army would join with the Polish Home Army in their efforts to defeat the Nazis. However, in one of the most ruthless betrayals in history, the Russians under the orders of Joseph Stalin refused to assist the brave Polish insurgents.

Nevertheless, unaided and undaunted, the Polish forces gained control over a large part of the city within the first 3 days of the uprising, forcing the Nazis to send in special SS detachments with heavy equipment. The brave soldiers of the Polish Home Army, numbering around 50,000, along with the spontaneous aid of the people of Warsaw, valiantly fought for 63 days despite lack of food, supplies, and ammunition.

Sadly, without the help of the Russians, General Bor-Komorowski was forced to surrender in October, and the Nazis deported most of the Poles who survived this bloody battle. Fortunately, General Bor-Komorowski was one of the Polish insurgents freed when American troops occupied Germany in May 1945, and he was able to recall the heroic deeds of his countrymen in their efforts to secure a free and independent Poland.

Mr. Speaker, I was glad to add my name as a cosponsor to House Joint Resolution 560, a bill to commemorate the Warsaw uprising, a historic day in the struggle of the Polish people to achieve self-determination, and a copy of that resolution follows:

H.J. RES. 560

Joint resolution to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the Warsaw uprising on August 1, 1944

Whereas August 1, 1984, marks the fortieth anniversary of the Warsaw uprising, an event of major significance in the history of World War II;

Whereas, on August 1, 1944, the Polish Home Army under the command of General Tadeusz Bor-Komorowski rose up against the Nazis who had begun evacuating Warsaw in the face of the Soviet advance through Eastern Europe, held major portions of that city for sixty-three days against insuperable odds, and suffered extreme hardship, retribution, and personal sacrifice throughout a heroic engagement in which over two hundred and fifty thousand Poles were killed, wounded, or missing;

Whereas September 1, 1984, marks the forty-fifth anniversary of the invasion of Poland by the Army and Air Force of the Third Reich, which was followed just sixteen days later by the Soviet invasion from the East and the subsequent occupation of a zone populated by thirteen million Poles, these events having led to the development of a strong underground movement directed by the Polish Government-in-exile;

Whereas the three wartime leaders of the Polish Home Army, Lieutenant General Stefan Rowecki, murdered by the Gestapo in 1944, Lieutenant General Bor-Komorowski, imprisoned by the Nazis and died in London in 1966, and Major General Leopold Okulicki, imprisoned by the Soviets and perished in a Soviet jail in 1945, symbolize the supreme personal sacrifice and commitment to the cause of freedom and self-determination;

Whereas the spirit of Polish resistance to foreign oppression and domination is symbolized by these historic events and remains a vital element in the Polish national character as manifested by the emergence of the Solidarity Trade Union movement in 1980; and

Whereas, in prior years, the President has granted special recognition to these important days in Polish history, with particular regard to the crucial role of the Polish Home Army in the Allied war effort, and to the leaders of the Polish Home Army: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States joins in recognizing the anniversary of the Warsaw uprising, which stands as a poignant reminder to the world of the power of the human spirit over adversity, and the anniversary of the Polish resistance to the World War II invasion of Poland and the leaders of that resistance, which symbolizes the currently continuing struggle of the Polish people and freedom loving people everywhere in the preservation of their liberties and in fulfillment of their national aspirations.

Throughout World War II, the Polish Home Army, Armia Krajowa, which had its origins in the Polish underground, made significant and valuable contributions to the war efforts of the Allies. Under its first Commander-in-Chief, Lt. Gen. Stefan Rowecki, the valiant Polish resistance forces engaged in sabotage, disruption of German transports and delivery of supplies, and psyschological and propaganda warfare designed to undermine Nazi morale. Unfortunately, General Rowecki was arrested by the Gestapo on June 30, 1943, and was executed by personal orders of Hitler during the first days of August 1944, in reprisal for the outbreak of the Warsaw uprising.

After the capture of General Bor-Komorowski, Maj. Gen. Leopold Okulicki assumed command as the third Commander-in-Chief of the Polish Home Army, and bravely led it through one of the most difficult periods of the war, from October 1944, until the occupation of Poland by the Red Army in January 1945. Russia, in its desire to annex Poland as a part of the Soviet Union, arrested General Okulicki on March 28, 1945. He was tried by the Soviets, sentenced to 10-years imprisonment, and died 6 months later in prison under mysterious circumstances.

This year I joined several of my colleagues in the House of Representatives in signing a letter to President Reagan urging him to confer the American Legion of Merit, on a posthumous basis, to General Rowecki, Bor-Komowski, and Okulicki. The leadership and fortitude that these three men exhibited as commanders of the Polish Home Army not only were vital to the Allies in their fight against the Nazis, but also serve today as an inspiration to the brave people of Poland who continue in this quest for freedom.

The text of the letter follows:

MAY 3, 1984.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: August 1, 1984 marks the fortieth anniversary of the Warsaw Uprising. In recognition of this major event and its impact on current developments in Poland, a Joint Resolution has been introduced. We hope to have it ready for your signature before the summer.

This resolution also recognizes the vital contribution to the cause of freedom made by three leaders of the Polish Underground Movement, called the Home Army. The main purpose of this letter is to recommend for your serious consideration the conferral of the Legion of Merit, on a posthumous basis, upon these three gallant military officers, namely: (1) Lieutenant General Stefan Rowecki (1895-1944), (2) Lieutenant General Tadeusz Bor-Komorowski (1895-1966), and (3) Major General Leopold Okulicki (1896-1945).

We believe such action on your part would have great symbolic value and impact during this anniversary year and would be regarded as a dramatic gesture of support for the national aspirations of the Polish people.

The Polish Home Army made a considerable contribution to the Allied victory over Nazi Germany, at the expense of very heavy losses. It was the largest and best organized resistance organization in occupied Europe. Its intelligence network, sabotage of Nazi war efforts and large scale guerilla activities rendered notable services to the United States and Great Britain. Toward the end of the war, members of the Home Army were recognized as combatants and accorded prisoner of war treatment by the Nazis in accordance with the Geneva Convention.

The first commander of the Polish Home Army, Lt. General Stefan Rowecki, was arrested and executed by the Gestapo in 1944. His successor, Lt. General Bor-Komorowski, was taken prisoner after the Warsaw Uprising and died in London in 1966. The last leader of the Home Army, Major General Leopold Okulicki, was imprisoned by the Soviets after the Red Army occupied Poland and perished in a Soviet jail in 1945, following a show trial in Moscow.

While all other Polish generals who fought on the allied side in Italy and France were decorated with the American Legion of Merit, leaders of the Polish Home Army received no such recognition. This omission was made out of deference to the Soviet Union, which considered non-communist Polish Armed Forces as an impediment to its plans to subjugate the Polish people. For this reason, Stalin ordered a halt to the Red Army offensive at the gates of Warsaw when the Home Army rose in arms against the Germans. The insurgents fought for 63 days, until they had to surrender in the fall of 1944. The Red Army waited until the Home Army was defeated and Warsaw destroyed before resuming its offensive the following spring. This delay enabled Eisenhower's armies to occupy most of Germany and directly affected the final outcome of the war.

There is, in fact, an established precedent for the granting of this posthumous award: In 1947, President Truman, acting on the recommendation of General Eisenhower, conferred the Legion of Merit upon the late General Draza Mihajlovic, the leader of Serbian "Cetnik" forces in Yugoslavia during World War II. No similar action was taken, however, with respect to the Polish Home Army Generals cited above.

We appeal to you, Mr. President, to repair an injustice committed forty years ago by refusal to recognize the merits and heroism of three outstanding military leaders of World War II.

This recommendation has the strong support of the entire Polish-American community—in particular, the Polish-American Congress which represents over eight million Americans of Polish extraction—who look to you for leadership on this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, I join with all Polish-Americans in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and Americans of Polish descent throughout this Nation, in commemorating the 40th anniversary of the Warsaw uprising. Let us pay tribute to the brave soldiers of the Polish Home Army who died for the cause of freedom for their homeland, and let their example forever serve as an inspiriation for the Polish people and all freedom-loving people throughout the world who continue to strive toward the realization of the Polish Home Army's objective of establishing a free and just Poland.●

HUMAN CONTACTS AND THE HELSINKI FINAL ACT—9 YEARS LATER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, today marks the ninth anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act, one of the landmark events in post-war East-West relations. The Helsinki accords, as they were subsequently referred to, represented an attempt by the governments of the United States, Canada, and all the nations of Europe, with the sole exception of Albania, to lay the foundations for improved bilateral and multilateral relations among one another. Based on unanimous consent among all signatories, the accords contained provisions for improving relations in a number of areas: military security, economic and scientific cooperation and human rights. In addition, the signatory states pledged to conduct their affairs with one another in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the established principles of international law.

Today, while bilateral relations between the United States and the Soviet Union deteriorates, the Helsinki process continues, kept alive by the realization that it is far too valuable a forum to be abandoned through the vagaries of superpower discord. Indeed, as my colleagues are probably aware, the Stockholm Conference on Disarmament in Europe, which opened in January of this year, is an outgrowth of the Helsinki process.

Nevertheless, while negotiations conducted by government representatives and professional diplomats play a vital role in the search for cooperation and security in Europe, the framers of the original Helsinki accords were cognizant of the importance of human contacts between the "average" citizens of East and West as a means of improving international relations. With this in mind, they pledged to:

Facilitate freer movement and contacts, individually and collectively, whether private or official, among persons, institutions and organizations of the participating states, and to contribute to the solution of the humanitarian problems that arise in that connection.

The facilitation of freer movement and increased personal contacts as a means of reducing international tension and the threat of nuclear war prompted the Moscow independent peace group to address the following comments, among others, to the Second Conference for Nuclear Disarmament at West Berlin in May 1983:

In order that weapons lose their applicability and the disagreements between West and East be resolved . . . discussion and dialogue must be conducted not only on the back stairs of the diplomatic milieu, but also in the streets and the homes of average citizens, in the press and on television.

It is time for the West and East to learn to exchange opinions not only at the diplomatic round table and behind closed doors . . . The West and the East must learn to speak with one another.

Unfortunately, Soviet implementation of the human contacts provisions of the Helsinki accords leave a great deal to be desired. In fact, in recent years, the Soviet Government has begun a systematic campaign designed to isolate its citizens from the West. Many members of the above-mentioned Moscow independent peace group have been harassed, jailed and exiled for their attempts to establish contact between themselves and other peace activists in the West. Felix Kochubievsky, who attempted to reestablish a "U.S.S.R.-Israel Friendship Society," was sentenced in 1982 to 2½ years in a labor camp for alleged "slander." Police have been stationed at the home of dissident historian Roy Medvedev to intimidate prospective visitors from the West. Direct dial telephone service between the Soviet Union and the West was effectively discontinued in the summer of 1982. Congressional hearings have revealed that mail delivery from the West to Soviet citizens is subject to interruptions and seizure by Soviet authorities. Packages sent from the West via government mails are in many cases returned for no justifiable reason, or simply "disappear." And I note with regret the announcement by the Soviet Government that prepaid packages from private parcel firms in the West will no longer be accepted after August 1 of this year, an ironic and disappointing coincidence with the original Helsinki signing date.

In addition, an entire series of new laws and degrees restricting contacts between Soviet citizens and foreign visitors have been promulgated during the last 2 years. Such an attitude by the Soviet Government does little to engender public confidence in Soviet pledges either at Helsinki or in other international fora.

Mr. Speaker, I must be candid and point out that our own Government could be more assiduous in implementing the human contacts provisions of the Helsinki accords. On a number of occasions, potential foreign visitors to the United States have been denied entrance visas on grounds of political affiliation, that is, Communist Party members. While there are undoubtedly individuals, such as known terrorists, whose presence on our shores would be detrimental to our security, I feel confident that our citizens' faith in democracy and our own national traditions are strong enough to weather the blandishments of those who might seek to persuade them otherwise.

In this connection, the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the U.S. Government body charged by law with monitoring compliance with the Helsinki accords, stated in its 1979 report on domestic compliance that "few single issues concerning U.S. compliance with the Helsinki accords have received more criticism from a broader range of sources than the one concerning U.S. visa policies, particularly as they apply to citizens from Eastern CSCE states." As a member of the Commission, I am proud that we do not attempt to cover up our own shortcomings, and I am confident that they will be remedied in the near future. At the same time, I would call upon the Government of the Soviet Union to live up to its Helsinki pledges, to seek the widening of human contacts rather than their curtailment, and to work through the Helsinki process to remove the obstacles to security and cooperation not onl in Europe, but throughout the world.●

REPORT FROM AFGHANISTAN

(Mr. WILSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues are fully aware, I have been a staunch advocate for assistance to the Mujahadeen in Afghanistan since the Soviet invasion in December 1979. I have visited the International Red Cross Hospitals in Pakistan, where the Afghan wounded are treated, as well as many of the refugee camps on the Northwest frontier.

In every visit I have heard reports of the noble and heroic work done by the "Medecins sans Frontieres," doctors without borders. This organization is primarily made up of French volunteer medical personnel who tend to the wounded inside Afghanistan at great personal risk.

The report speaks for itself regarding both humanitarian needs within Afghanistan and the usual Russian savagery and brutality.

The report follows:

REPORT FROM AFGHANISTAN

(By Claude Malhuret)

For three years now, Medecins sans Frontieres[1]—Doctors Without Borders—has been in Afghanistan. The first medical teams it sent arrived in May 1980, five months after the Soviet invasion. Since then, we have sent 162 physicians and nurses who replace each other in relays for periods of four to eight months, providing an uninterrupted MSF presence. We have equipped and operated a total of 12 hospitals in the provinces of Nuristan, Paktia, Badakhshan (close to the Soviet border), Wardak (some 40 km from Kabul), Bamiyan, Uruzgan, and Zabul. Four of these hospitals were deliberately bombed and destroyed by Soviet planes in the fall of 1981. We evacuated two other hospitals in areas where we felt the need for medical services was limited and where local medics whom we have trained have been able to take over. At the present time, the MSF has 22 persons working in six hospitals. From our uninterrupted presence in Afghanistan, we have been able to evaluate the situation in the country since the beginning of the war, specifically in the areas where we are working. The current situation in Afghanistan is one of protracted war. The duration and character of the war derive directly from the Soviet style of anti-guerrilla warfare.

Guerrilla warfare has already demonstrated its effectiveness elsewhere, and until recently no one has known how to counter it. The scattering of populations, the creation of village strongholds, and control and card-indexing of inhabitants have proved to be very useful means of restricting guerrilla advances, but the resistance fighters have always won out in the end.

It is true that there are examples to the contrary, such as the victory of the British army in Malaysia, and that of the French expeditionary corps in Algeria. But in the latter case, de Gaulle realized that France's long-term position was untenable and so he complied with the demands of the National Liberation Front, even though the Front was in a very poor military position when negotiations began.

Totalitarian regimes have analyzed these repeated failures and found a new answer to the guerrilla "problem," one that is simple, logical and effective. Since the basis of the strength of a resistance movement lies in the practice that Mao Zedong called "the fish taking to the water," the easiest way to separate the guerrillas from the population is to empty the fish bowl and capture its contents. In other words, an effective counter-strategy in the face of guerrilla action involves massive reprisals against the population, sometimes including the extermination of a large part of that population.

Some might think that such prospects would be repulsive to even the most determined invader. But this has not been the case; this philosophy has become a reality before our very eyes over the past several years. In the province of Ogaden, which revolted against the regime in power in Ethiopia, towns and villages were leveled one after the other. Nearly one million refugees—almost all the inhabitants—are now in refugee camps in nearby Somalia. And air units from Addis Ababa have no scruples about making raids on the camps.

In Kampuchea, the Vietnamese victory over the Khmer Rouge four years ago would never have been possible if the people had not been starved into submission by the Vietnamese, who feared that part of the relief support might fall to the enemy forces of Pol Pot. While tens of thousands of Kampucheans died of hunger and hundreds of thousands fled into Thailand, thousands of tons of food provided by international relief organizations spoiled on the docks of Kompong Som. The only portions of these supplies that were used went to feed the occupying Vietnamese forces and the Kampucheans under control in the pacified areas.

This type of warfare is currently being used in Afghanistan, the only difference being that the Afghan resistance groups have thus far made it fail. It may therefore be more difficult to recognize the pattern in all of these anti-guerrilla campaigns, but their common characteristics can be divided into three main categories: how the Soviet version of anti-guerrilla warfare compares with traditional Western anti-guerrilla warfare; what specific means it uses; and what the final outcome is.

II

One difference between the type of warfare used by the Russians in Afghanistan and that used by Western armies, such as the French in Algeria or the Americans, in Vietnam, is that Western armies try to control the population and make every effort to prevent infiltration by guerrillas. From the bases they set up in towns, they try to establish a sphere of influence, to find support in the villages and hamlets, and to create militias to defend areas that might be attacked by guerrilla fighters before reinforcements from the regular army arrive. To ensure that resistance groups cannot get supplies from the people, the Western armies set up protected villages where the people are brought together and where food, supplies, and livestock are stored.

Manhunts are continuously organized, from the bases that are considered safe, to capture or kill guerrillas or to seize their caches of arms and ammunition. In all, despite the irresponsible acts committed by the French army in Algeria and the U.S. Army in Vietnam, their anti-guerrilla warfare was based on one principle: to obtain the support of the population by any means, such as by giving privileges to newfound allies and by waging a hard war against the enemy. I have already noted the poor results of this type of warfare.

The Soviets operate differently. In Afghanistan, the towns held by the occupying Soviet forces are not used as bases to secure a hold over the neighboring areas. The towns are used as garrisons and as logistical stepping-stones. They provide storage facilities, aviation bases, barracks, and strongholds. The rest of the country is not under Soviet control. Protected villages do not exist. No effort is made to offer privileges to try to win over the population. The few military operations that involve ground forces are merely for strategic purposes. Some examples are the engagements that have taken place on the road from Kabul to the Soviet border, in the Panjshir Valley and the Wakhan corridor; operations there are not designed to capture resistance fighters.

The reason for this difference in anti-guerrilla tactics is very simple: the Soviets are not as naive as the Westerners. They understood long ago—perhaps back at the time of the 1933 Ukrainian genocide when this tactic was used quite successfully—that a war involving guerrillas and anti-guerrilla fighters would never be won by either side if the emphasis was placed on being in the good graces of the population. On the contrary, the war would be won by the side that succeeded in making terror reign.

III

This brings me to the second aspect: specific means used to counter resistance movements. This does not involve a warm bath/cold shower tactic, but the exclusive use of boiling water—again and again and again, until both the guerrilla fighters and the population ask for mercy.

During the first phase, until late 1980, air and ground equipment and infantry units were brought together to establish the reign of terror in this fashion. To mention just one example, in the province of Hazarajat in central Afghanistan, several hundred armored vehicles would leave either Kabul or Jaghori and occupy a valley that could easily be entered. The population, which had warning either by rumor or because they had seen the helicopter movement, fled into the mountains. The Soviet troops therefore entered empty villages where they remained for a few days, harassed by the Muslim resistance groups—the Mujahedeen—who also barred their access to the upper valleys. During those few days, the soldiers pillaged and burned homes, set fire to crops and dragged off with them the few inhabitants left behind—mostly old people, whom they interrogated or summarily executed.

In 1980, three of these raids by Soviet troops took place along the Shibar Pass road; the soldiers thereby managed to occupy Bamiyan, Yakaolang, and Panjau for about ten days in June with 300 armored vehicles, in August (again with 300 armored vehicles), and in September (with 120 armored vehicles). In their last attack, the Russians destroyed everything in sight, set fire to crops, and burned bazaars to the ground in Panjau, Yakaolang, and several villages on the road to Shibar. They left the former American hospital in Yakaolang in ruins.

During a similar expedition in the fall of 1980, many homes were burned down in the region of Turkmen, west of Kaubl, and the small hospital in Lolenj was also completely destroyed. The same kinds of destruction took place in mid-December in the northern part of Ghazni province. When one of our medical teams arrived two days after the end of the fighting, fires were still smoldering in a number of villages, and people were being wounded by booby traps left behind by the Soviet troops. Once again, the effect sought was terror, not strictly military victory.

Since late 1980, warfare using such operations has dropped off, probably because the Red Army has lost too many of its troops. But the Russians have now found other ways to impose a reign of terror, particularly by the use of air raids against which the poorly equipped resistance fighters are completely defenseless. In the Hazarajat region, for example, the villages bombed in the last two years are much too numerous to be listed here in full. Just a few of the targets were Jaghori, Panjau, Behsud, Jalrez and Waras. In Jalrez, a home where a wedding was taking place was bombed and the tragedy left several dozen victims. In Waras, where the independent provisional government of Hazarajat has its headquarters, the helicopters bypassed this organization, which should have been a tempting target, and attacked the village bazaar.

[1] Medecins sans Frontieres (Doctors Without Borders) was created in 1971 by a group of physicians who had worked in Biafra during the Nigerian civil war of 1960s. This rapid-deployment medical organization has sent teams to conflict-torn areas in Southeast Asia, Lebanon, Chad, East Africa, Angola, Central America, and Iranian Kurdistan, often despite the opposition of host governments.

Military intervention carried out mainly by helicopter also includes dropping mines and booby-trapped toys. I shall not go into detail, but only stress two points. First, camouflaged anti-personnel mines are not designed to kill, but to injure. The Russians know quite well that in this type of war, an injured person is much more trouble than a dead person. The injured person demobilizes fighters who have to transport him, and, of course, he can no longer fight. In many cases, he will die several days or weeks later from gangrene or from staphylococcus or gram-negative septicemia, with atrocious suffering, which further depresses those who must watch him die. The MSF has also seen the damage caused by the explosion of booby-trapped toys, in most cases plastic pens of small red trucks, which are choice terror weapons. Their main targets are children whose hands and arms are blown off. It is impossible to imagine any objective that is more removed from conventional military strategy, which forswears civilian targets.

The second aim of dropping of anti-personnel mines is to affect the economy. First, troops try to set up a blockade using mines that are scattered by the thousands along the passes leading to Pakistan (but with almost no success), and second, they try to scatter the people's livestock. When I arrived in Afghanistan for the first time in 1980, I was immediately struck by the number of goats and cows that had legs in splints made of bamboo sticks and tied with wire. The herdsmen explained to me what had happended: these animals had stepped on mines and been injured as a result of the explosion. But the greatest loss, the herdsmen told me, is not so much the ones with splints, but rather all those animals that were killed from secondary infections. And although the Afghans clear the mines from the roads to prevent more human deaths, the animals in the fields continue to get killed. Livestock in several regions of the country has been slaughtered in this way. The effect of this slaughtering on the food supply in Afghanistan is clear.

Another point to be considered is the question of refugees—those still in Afghanistan as well as those who have fled. These refugees should not be considered in the traditional way, as an unfortunate but unintended consequence of the war, but rather as part of Soviet warfare strategy, the same that was used in Kampuchea, the Ogaden and Eritrea. The objective is, as mentioned earlier, to evacuate the country in order to isolate the guerrilla fighters.

The methodical pursuit of this objective is the only possible explanation for the incredible number of Afghan refugees. Some flee the country to Iran and Pakistan, where they are once again "used" by the Russians, whose agents infiltrate the refugees' ranks to further aggravate the conflicts that exist in Pakistan between different ethnic groups, as many believe is happening in Baluchistan. The figures for Afghan refugees in Pakistan and Iran as reported to international bodies run in excess of four million.[2] Out of an Afghan population of 15 to 17 million, this figure is already enormous.

But to this figure must be added the hundreds of thousands of "internal" refugees who remain within Afghanistan. They have fled to the main towns, where they come under the control of the state army. Thus, this enlarged refugee count should be compared not to the total population of Afghansitan, but to the population in the rural areas that are held by the resistance fighters. When one adds to that the number of persons killed either in the fighting or by diseases that frequently find their cause in malnutrition—especially among children—one can better understand why that Soviet strategy is highly effective and that it has no doubt been responsible for chasing nearly half of the population away from guerrilla strongholds.

Also, several thousands children are sent to the Soviet Union to study to be officers one day in the Socialist Republic of Afghanistan; this offers a very close comparison with the Russians' "liberation" of the southern republics of the U.S.S.R. in the 1920s and 1930s, which led to a total victory over what has been called the Basmachi ("bandit") revolt.

IV

Before coming to the last issue, which concerns the final outcome of the tactics just discussed, a word must be said about one of the conditions needed for this strategy to be a success: secrecy.

International public opinion would never accept such enormities if it were informed daily on the developments in Afghanistan. The need for secrecy explains why borders are systematically closed and why journalists are not allowed to enter the country. Of course, some journalists disregard this, but they are so few in number that their reports draw little attention. Compare, for instance, the amount of coverage on Afghanistan with that given for several years on the war in Vietnam.

The French physicians who have been on permanent duty in Afghanistan for the last four years have become key eyewitnesses, and in spite of their lack of experience in journalism, they have been able to make up somewhat for the negligence of news reporting. I use the word "negligence" because, if a small organization like ours can succeed in maintaining more than 20 physicians on permanent duty in four provinces in Afghanistan, despite government acts of violence against them, the news media could do likewise. The Russians cannot tolerate the fact that we are there to witness what is happening, and we have therefore become their target. In 1980 and 1981, four MSF hospitals were deliberately destroyed by MI-24 helicopters. Two other hospitals in the region of Panjshir, which are operated by another Frence organization, Aide Medicale Internationale, were destroyed in the same way. May I add that one of the hospitals had a big red cross clearly visible on its roof.

Also, on several occasions, the physicians themselves have been pursued by Soviet soldiers who had in their possession photos of the doctors that they showed to the people they questioned. All the doctors have managed to get away except one, Dr. Philippe Augoyard, who was captured in January 1983. But we do not think that the Russians will try that type of operation again, as it proved disastrous for their image in Europe—especially of course in France. Rather than discouraging new recruits, which was probably the goal, the Augoyard case let physicians in other countries know about our work. Such incidents result in a bad press that affects the Soviets in other spheres. At the present time, only 50 percent of our medical teams are French; the remainder are Dutch, English, Belgian, Swiss, Scandinavian, and other nationalities. If, for example, a Dutch doctor were arrested in Afghanistan, the anti-Soviet publicity would certainly influence the ongoing debate over the installation of American missiles in Europe.

V

Now we come to the question of the final outcome of the Soviet strategy. The examples given above concerned Kampuchea and Ethiopia. The reason for this is that Afghanistan is not a very good example to illustrate Soviet anti-guerrilla warfare, precisely because the results have so far been unsuccessful. The towns of Afghanistan, the main bases for Soviet intervention, are poorly controlled. Not a week goes by without word of an attack against the government or against communist-bloc embassies in Kabul. In response, the heavily commercial districts in big cities such as Herat and Kandahar were reportedly severely bombed and nearly destroyed by planes because they had gone over to the resistance—just another example of the Soviet terror strategy and massive destruction, which can be contrasted with the house-by-house taking of the Algiers Casbah by the French army in 1970, with little loss to property or human life. The Soviet strongholds of Bamiyan, Ghazni, Gardez, and Khost are completely encircled by the Mujahedeen. In Bamiyan, for example, a garrison composed of 200 Russians and 200 Afghans has its post high up on a peak; supplies reach the garrison by helicopter. Helicopters are therefore gaining in importance for the Soviets as a means of transport between towns because communication links are not at all under control, although efforts have recently been made to improve them.

The puppet government of President Babrak Karmal has also attempted psychological warfare, by trying to play on local antagonisms among the Pushtun tribes. But the government has not been very successful at this, particularly since the death in 1981 of Faiz Mohammed, Minister for Tribal Affairs, who was killed by a group he was trying to bribe.

The cease-fire agreements that have been made have worked as much in favor of the resistance fighters as they have in favor of the government leaders, and they are based more on a balance of power than on a successful psychological warfare strategy. This is currently the case in Panjshir.[3]

---

[2] The Iranian government informed the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in 1983 that there are 1.5 million Afghan refugees in Iran; Pakistan reports 2.8 million Afghan refugees inside its borders.

[3] During the summer of 1983, Ahmad Shah Massoud, resistance commander in the Panjshir Valley, negotiated a truce with the Soviets, refusing to deal with the Kabul regime (thus forcing the Soviets to implicitly recognize him). Under the truce, he resupplied the valley, opened supply lines and formed alliances with leaders in the north and as far west as the town of Herat. The truce has now ended, and Massoud has refused to extend it.

The number of armored vehicles that have been destroyed by resistance forces is incredibly large, considering their outdated weaponry and suicidal tactics (such as leaping onto tanks with homemade gasoline bombs). We counted more than 600 vehicles destroyed in the areas where we work, which, when extrapolated, comes to a total figure of some three to four thousand for the entire country. This figure is generally found to be so unbelievable that, whenever I mention it, I never fail to have with me a set of slides to document what I am saying.

The economic blockade has also not succeeded. The border areas are as easily accessible as they were before it was imposed; our medical teams need only three days to reach the central province of Hazarajat. Our movement is not restricted, as people generally think; we travel by car or truck, and only during the day.

Setting fire to crops and storage shelters is another anti-guerrilla tactic, but its effect is limited because less than half the amount of food that was needed before the war is needed now due to the diminished population. In addition, caravans going to and from Pakistan continue to bring fresh produce. Another striking—and ironic—example of the ambiguous effect on the economy, also from Hazarajat, is the need in Kabul for firewood, which has forced the government to deal with the resistance. The resistance fighters bring wood to government outposts and exchange it for salt or sugar from Kaubl.

Despite the attempts to restrict the food supply, trends in local market prices indicate that the blockade is not working. Some prices have actually dropped since the Soviet invasion. At Jaghori, for instance, a gallon of gasoline that cost 200 to 300 Afghanis (AFS) in 1979 costs 160 AFS today. A pack of cigarettes that cost 60 AFS in 1979 now costs 28 AFS. These figures suggest that supplies are adequate to keep prices from rising. Other prices have risen but less rapidly than those in many Third World countries, even countries that are not at war: a ser (15 pounds) of flour costs 70 AFS in 1978; it rose to 160 AFS in 1979; today it costs 180 AFS. The price of a ser of tea doubled between 1978 and 1979, from 960 to 1,920 AFS; since then it has only risen to a current price of 2,500 (less than one-third of the 1978–79 rate of increase), and even this price rise may be largely attributable to inflation.

The examples illustrating the poor short-term effect of Soviet strategy suggest a rather optimistic trend with regard to the Afghan resistance movement, but my conclusion is much less so. Everything I have said about the current situation shows that the war in Afghanistan is one in which the balance of power has not changed in four years, in spite of the fact that the two adversaries are unequally matched—on one side the world's biggest army, on the other a handful of people standing tall against the invader. There is no sign of any change soon in this state of affairs, and I do not believe that the Afghans can be beaten in the short or medium term. But Soviet strategy involves two aspects that may make the outcome in Afghanistan differ from the Western experience; one, already mentioned, is the use of mass terror, completely unlike any of the more moderate types of intervention. The second is that the Soviets can afford a protracted war in the short term for the sake of a long-term victory.

The Russians do not need smashing victories to announce to their citizenry, as Soviet public opinion does not influence Soviet policy. Catastrophes, such as that in the Salang tunnel where several hundred Soviet and communist-regime troops (and civilians) were killed, do not incite an outcry in Moscow for Soviet "boys" to come home. The Soviet army can wait it out as long as it did for the Basmachi revolt to end—and it waited for that for 20 years. It can wait even longer if necessary. The Afghan resistance will hold out for a long time, but in the end it will probably be beaten. It might not be beaten, however, if in the coming years there is a profound change in the international balance of power and in the reactions of Westerners to Soviet totalitarianism. It is not impossible that this change could take place, but only a very wise person would dare to predict the future of Afghanistan.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. HAWKINS, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.J. Res. 577. Joint resolution designating August 1984 as "Polish American Heritage Month."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 22 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, August 2, 1984, at 10 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

3826. A letter from the Executive Associate Director for Budget, Office of Management and Budget, transmitting his determination that it is necessary to reapportion the compensation and pensions appropriation on a basis which indicates the necessity for a supplemental estimate of appropriation, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1515(b)(2); to the Committee on Appropriations.

3827. A letter from the benefits manager, Farm Credit Banks of Texas, transmitting a report on the Farm Credit Banks of Texas Pension Plan for the year ended December 31, 1983, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 9503(a)(1)(B); to the Committee on Government Operations.

3828. A letter from the Chief Immigration Judge, Executive Office for Immigration Review, Department of Justice, transmitting a report on the suspension of deportation of certain aliens of good character and with required residency when deportation causes hardship under section 244(a), Immigration and Nationality Act, pursuant to INA, section 244(c) (66 Stat. 214, 76 Stat. 1247); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 5585

By Mr. WATKINS:

—At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

RETROREFLECTORS

SEC. 11. Section 25 of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 U.S.C. 26) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (c) through (h) as subsections (d) through (i), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) No carrier may, after 30 days after the regulations required by paragraph (2) are issued, operate a railroad car which is not equipped with retroreflectors in accordance with such regulations.

"(2) Within one year after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Secretary of Transportation shall issue regulations prescribing the size, type, amount, location, manner and time of application, and maintenance of retroreflectors required under paragraph (1).".

H.R. 5921

By Mr. FRENZEL:

—After line 21, page 39, insert the following new section:

"SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, funds appropriated by this Act under:

"(1) Title I, Department of Transportation, Office of the Secretary, for Salaries and Expenses, and for Transportation Planning, Research, and Development;

"(2) Title I, Department of Transportation, Coast Guard, for Operating Expenses except that portion appropriated for debt reduction; Acquisition, Construction, and Improvements; Alteration of Bridges; Reserve Training, Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation;

"(3) Title I, Department of Transportation, for the Federal Aviation Administration, except Grants-in Aid for Airports (Liquidation of Contract Authorization) (Airport and Airway Trust Fund);

"(4) Title I, Department of Transportation, Federal Highway Administration, for Highway Safety Research and Development; Railroad-Highway Crossings Demonstration Projects; Highway Safety Separations Demonstration Project; Motor Carrier Safety; Motor Carrier Safety Grants;

"(5) Title I, Department of Transportation, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, for Operations and Research;

"(6) Title I, Department of Transportation, for the Federal Railroad Administration, except for $15,000,000 derived by transfer from the unobligated balances of "Redeemable preference shares" for Rail Service Assistance; Conrail Labor Protection; $4,000,000 derived by transfer from the appropriation "Coast Guard, retired pay" for Grants to the National Railroad Passenger Corporation; and Railroad Rehabilitation and Improvement Financing Funds;

"(7) Title I, Department of Transportation, Urban Mass Transportation Administration, for Discretionary Grants (Limitation on Obligations);

"(8) Title I, Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Limitation on Administrative Expenses;

"(9) Title II, Related Agencies, Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board; National Transportation Safety Board; Civil Aeronautics Board, except Payments to Air Carriers (including Transfer of Unexpended Balances); Interstate Commerce Commission, except Payments for Directed Rail Service; Panama Canal Commission; United States Railway Association; Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority; are hereby reduced by 4.3 percent.".

REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

In compliance with Public Law 601, 79th Congress, title III, Regulation of Lobbying Act, section 308(b), which provides as follows:

(b) All information required to be filed under the provisions of this section with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate shall be compiled by said Clerk and Secretary, acting jointly, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar quarter with respect to which such information is filed and shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate jointly submit their report of the compilation required by said law and have included all registrations and quarterly reports received.

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the second calendar quarter 1984:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the second calendar quarter 1984:

(NOTE.—The form used for reporting is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

PAGE 1

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following reports for the first calendar quarter of 1984 were received too late to be included in the published reports for that quarter:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

PAGE 1

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1984

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, just prior to the July 4 recess an overwhelming majority of the Members of the House joined in passing H.R. 5490, the Civil Rights Act of 1984. I am sure that all of my colleagues are aware of the essential need to abolish discrimination on the basis of race, national origin, sex, age, and handicap in all activities that receive Federal financial assistance. Prior to the recent recess, Carl T. Rowan, the distinguished columnist, wrote an excellent article which was published in the June 11, 1984, Chicago Sun-Times regarding the Civil Rights Act of 1984. During the recess, the Washington Post editorialized on this important legislation in "Progress on Grove City." I was especially pleased to note the Post's position on the legislation because a prior editorial had been somewhat negative. The New York Times has also published an excellent editorial.

The Post editorial was especially complimentary of the House's deliberations of H.R. 5490 and the committee report which was prepared jointly by the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on the Judiciary. I urge my colleagues to read both of these informative articles.

The editorials and the Carl Rowan article refute the administration's attempt to use scare tactics to delay Senate consideration of H.R. 5490. I look forward to early Senate consideration on this legislation because it is very much needed and because the Civil Rights Act of 1984 will ensure that the Nation's commitment to civil rights remains intact.

The articles follow:

NEW CIVIL-RIGHTS LAW NEEDED—NOW

(By Carl T. Rowan)

When 63 of the 100 members of the Senate, including Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. (R-Tenn.) and Finance Committee Chairman Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.), are co-sponsoring a civil-rights bill, you might assume such a law is reasonably good for the nation.

You might, but not the Reagan administration, which again is engaging in tactics of obfuscation and obstruction so as to offer aid and comfort to those who practice sexual and racial discrimination in the nation's colleges.

The most important civil-rights issue before Congress is a measure to restore and make clear the power of the Federal government to enforce civil-rights laws at schools and colleges that receive federal assistance. New legislation was made necessary by an incredible decision last February in which the Supreme Court interpreted Congress as intending that where a college discriminated against women in one program, federal funds should be withdrawn only from that program, not the entire college.

Outraged members of Congress said they intended no such limitation, but they have watched colleges leap to discriminate on the basis of race, national origin, age and handicap on the assumption that they can only lose a piddling amount of federal money for any program in which they practice discrimination, while they'll continue to enjoy federal largesse in other programs.

Some colleges have argued that federal Basic Educational Opportunity Grants and other financial aid to students do not, under the law, make the college a "recipient of federal assistance." The Supreme Court ruled unanimously that such grants and other financial aid did make Grove City College in Pennsylvania a recipient of federal assistance—but the court said Congress intended only that funds be cut off from any program in which Grove discriminates, leaving the college to benefit from federal funds in other programs.

This Supreme Court interpretation is so egregiously absurd in wiping out a comprehensive ban on unfair discriminations that even Education Secretary T. H. Bell and William Bradford Reynolds, head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, have conceded that Congress ought to pass a law to reverse that court decision.

But the Reagan administration is playing foot-dragging games, just as it did on extension of the Voting Rights Act—until the House approved extension, 389-24, and the Senate approved, 85-8, forcing the president to sign it. Just as the Reagan administration offered shallow, delaying excuses for trying to give tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University and the Goldsboro Christian Schools, which practiced racial discrimination, so now Reynolds and Bell are going up on the Hill to offer flimsy rhetoric as to why the Congress ought not pass a law that wipes out any doubt and confusion about what a college will lose in federal aid if it discriminates against women—or other groups protected by various laws.

Reynolds and Bell went before the Senate last week to complain about "ambiguities" in the law that they said might give Federal judges more powers than Congress intended. Reynolds saw the Senate bill as creating "unnecessary tension" between the principles of equal opportunity and non-discrimination and "limited federal involvement in state and local affairs."

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) told Reynolds that Reagan wanted to "have it both ways" and charged that the assistant attorney general had "misrepresented and distorted" the pending legislation.

Dole expressed a willingness to accept "minor amendments" to make unlikely the "worst-case scenarios" presented by Reynolds, and to preclude the "grief and considerable chaos" that Bell said he feared. Several senators lambasted the administration for presenting vague objections and scare stories.

This administration just can't seem to deal straightforwardly with women and minorities and their aspirations to full citizenship.

[From the Washington Post, July 2, 1984]

PROGRESS ON GROVE CITY

With overwhelming support from both parties, the House has voted to reverse the Supreme Court decision in the Grove City case, which severely restricted the reach of federal anti-discrimination laws. Sponsors of the bill earned that strong bipartisan support in the House—and deserve similar support in the Senate—though the inherent merit of their cause, and through the care with which they addressed and answered various charges that had been raised against the measure.

By limiting application of laws prohibiting discrimination to the specific program or activity receiving federal money—rather than the larger institution of which it is a part—the Supreme Court overturned longstanding practice and effectively gutted federal anti-discrimination efforts. The administration contends that it does not oppose the objective of returning anti-discrimination laws to their pre-Grove City status. But it claims that the House language would create new protections and lead to further federal entanglement in the affairs of states, localities and private institutions.

Upon closer inspection, however, the "horror story" examples raised by administration officials turn out to have nothing but scare value. Numerous officials who enforced anti-discrimination laws during previous Republican and Democratic administrations have testified that the House bill is carefully written to do no more than put into law administrative rules that have long governed enforcement of laws prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race, age, sex or handicap. The committee report specifically addresses each of the hypothetical cases raised by the administration and demonstrates that the claimed results are either incorrect or represent no change from existing law.

Farmers will not be subject to new controls because they take farm subsidies, nor will banks be because they cash Social Security checks. Hordes of federal enforcers will not descend upon unoffending state agencies—all of which are, in any case, barred from acts of discrimination by numerous constitutional and statutory prohibitions. Limits on remedies and enforcement remain intact.

In fact it is noteworthy that the Justice Department has failed, upon invitation from Sens. Bob Dole and Ted Kennedy, to come forward with any official suggestions as to how the language of the bill could be improved. That's not surprising when you realize that the regulations upon which it is based were originally drawn up with the close attention of top Cabinet officials—including Caspar Weinberger, then Secretary of health, education and welfare—and have survived many years of enforcement. There will always be gray areas in interpreting and applying anti-discrimination laws. But the House-passed measure does not add to that difficulty.

[From The New York Times, June, 1984]

PASS THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1984

Most of Congress clearly wants to do something, fast, to make sure the Federal Government doesn't subsidize discrimination against minorities, women, older Americans and the handicapped. The House has voted 375 to 32 to overturn a Supreme Court decision that allows schools and other institutions to accept Federal money through one office while discriminating in another.

Attention therefore turns to the Senate, where the bill has 62 sponsors but some resourceful opponents. Time will be short after tonight's convention recess to overcome obstructionism in the Judiciary Committee, the threat of a filibuster and the Reagan Administration's harassment. The Civil Rights Act of 1984 needs urgent help.

Civil rights organizations and other groups have joined with a broad, bipartisan coalition in Congress for a clear, limited purpose: to restore to the Federal Government the full range of enforcement power, including the rarely used but effective power to cut off funds, that existed before the Supreme Court spoke. Except for a curious floor amendment purporting to extend the anti-bias laws to Congress and the judiciary, the House has hewed to that line, warding off attempts to build a top-heavy civil rights Christmas tree.

The temptation to apply the bias laws directly to Congress and the courts is understandable. Those branches have long been busy issuing rules for only others to obey. But that gap in the law cannot be filled merely by defining the Legislature and judiciary as "recipients" of Federal funds. The problem should be addressed seriously, but separately.

Meanwhile, the Reagan Administration has been anything but helpful. William Bradford Reynolds, the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, argues that the bill could be construed to find mom-and-pop food stores "recipients" of Federal money and thus required to install ramps for wheelchairs—because they deal with food stamps. He suggests that individuals receiving Social Security checks might be similarly covered.

As 13 former civil rights enforcers for the Johnson, Nixon, Ford and Carter Administrations have testified, Mr. Reynolds is imagining things. His hobgoblins, and others, were raised and dispatched in two days of House debate. It's certainly unlikely that Mr. Reynolds himself would so wildly misconstrue this law and there's no basis for fearing that others would.

Senators Orrin Hatch and Jeremiah Denton now say they share some of Mr. Reynolds' fears, so the going will be hard in the Judiciary Committee. Like all the great rights laws of the last two decades, this one has found its obstructionists who play for time. Once again it will take all the strength that moderate and bipartisan leaders can muster to overcome them. But they will be overcome.●

A HASTY DÉTENTE WITH PEKING

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to present to my colleagues what I consider a timely article written by a constituent from my district. Parris Chang is a professor of Political Science and the chairman of Asian-area studies at Pennsylvania State University. He has completed extensive research in the area of American relations with China and subsequently has written several articles on the subject. I am offering Dr. Chang's recent article, published in the July 16 issue of Newsweek, which addresses concerns that despite recent negotiations and tentative agreements, Washington and Peking may still be facing some difficult misunderstandings.

[From Newsweek, July 16, 1984]

A HASTY DÉTENTE WITH PEKING

(By Parris Chang)

In the first three years of his administration, Ronald Reagan was so preoccupied with the question of Taiwan's future that he allowed American relations with China to stagnate dangerously. Now Washington suddenly seems almost too eager to patch up its relations with Peking. After several recent rounds of exchanges among high-level officials, the two nations hurriedly signed some dramatic preliminary agreements on a variety of matters, ranging from nuclear-energy cooperation to weapons sales. But neither side really took the time to consider the political realities confronting its negotiating partner. As a result, the United States and China may now face some sticky new misunderstandings in the year ahead.

The accord on nuclear energy, initialed in Peking last April by President Reagan and China's Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang, is one case in point. At the time, it was hailed as the centerpiece of an improved U.S.-China relationship. But when Reagan returned home, he ran head-on into bipartisan congressional opposition to the agreement. Liberals and conservatives alike were concerned about the possibility that China might divert American nuclear technology to military uses, either for itself or for third countries. At the White House last January, Zhao did make a general pledge that China would not "engage in nuclear proliferation . . . [or] help other nations to develop nuclear weapons." But the Reagan administration has had little luck in its attempt to persuade the Chinese to agree to some specific safeguards against proliferation. Congress is particularly concerned about the persistent reports that China has helped Pakistan to develop its nuclear-weapons program; now, according to Sen. Alan Cranston, Pakistan may be nearing the nuclear-weapons testing stage.

"Duplicity": The nuclear issue threatens to become a major irritant in U.S.-China relations. Already some Chinese are accusing Washington of "duplicity and double-dealing" by backing away from the nuclear agreement. In fact, the United States was more careless than duplicitous. In the administration's haste to make political hay out of Reagan's Peking trip, the U.S. government did not take the time to hammer out a politically durable nuclear accord.

Washington has also rushed toward agreements on military cooperation with China without realizing that Peking is no longer quite as interested as it once was in forming a strategic partnership with the United States. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger visited Peking last fall and Defense Minister Zhang Aiping traveled to Washington last month. After those visits, the two officials did "agree in principle" to the potential sale of U.S. antiaircraft missiles and antitank weapons to China. But Peking has put off signing a formal accord, at least until some of the publicity dies down. For the moment, Peking has diplomatic reasons for playing down its relations with Washington. Ironically, China's dealings with the Americans have greatly strengthened its hand for negotiating a rapprochement with the Russians. China's objective now is to develop a posture that would give it more leverage and flexibility in its relations with both superpowers. Peking is also trying to reassert its identification with the Third World—which may also account for its attempt to distance itself a bit from Washington.

China also has domestic needs that are more urgent than military expansion—primarily modernization of its creaking economy. The Chinese are far more interested in importing Western advice on how to build their own arms industry than they are in purchasing specific weapons. But even if China does suddenly change its mind and push for more military cooperation with the United States, Washington should consider its own strategic and diplomatic interests very carefully. The key question is whether a strategic accord with China is an asset or a liability. Even though the Chinese People's Liberation Army has more than 4 million men under arms (more than any other nation), its weapons and equipment are hopelessly obsolete and it has a very limited capacity to fight a modern high-tech war. During the Sino-Vietnamese conflict in 1979, for example, the PLA performed very poorly against Hanoi's better-trained and better-equipped forces. It remains highly questionable whether China could ever be a credible military counterweight to the Soviet Union's military might in Asia.

Technology: It would take a massive transfusion of arms and equipment from the United States to China, at a cost of $50 billion or $60 billion, to make even a slight difference in the prevailing Sino-Soviet military balance. Leaving aside the issue of whether Peking would accept such military largesse from the American "hegemonists," the Chinese would have significant problems absorbing high-level military technology. China lacks the necessary support structure—highly educated personnel, research and development facilities, defense related industries with ample productive capacity—to do the job. In addition, most PLA soldiers lack the educational background for advanced military training. And large numbers of them, indoctrinated in Mao's doctrine of the People's War, seem unwilling or unable to adapt to modern methods of warfare.

A large transfer of arms from Washington to Peking would also destabilize the equilibrium of Asia and generate more problems than it would solve for the United States. A new supply of advanced aircraft and communications and electronic equipment to China would greatly enhance Peking's ability to threaten its neighbors such as India, the members of ASEAN and, of course, Taiwan. Then, too, the Soviet Union might feel threatened by a closer Washington-Peking axis and could decide to take countermeasures. The Russians could, for example, attempt to prod North Korea into military action against South Korea.

This is not to say that America should disregard China's strategic importance and turn a blind eye to any opportunities for military cooperation with Peking. But to be realistic, Washington must understand that Peking is in no sense an ally, nor is it likely to become one in the foreseeable future.●

CONTROLLING FEDERAL SPENDING IS KEY TO DEFICIT REDUCTION

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, our quest to reduce the deficit has been plagued by too much rhetoric and not enough substantive action. Instead of considering and enacting significant deficit-reduction measures, it has become fashionable for the President and Members of Congress to brutally attack certain groups as the root of all deficit evil.

We have listened to tales about those welfare queens who use food stamps to buy Cadillacs and condos in Florida. We are told time and time again about Americans who are unemployed or homeless by choice. And we are asked to believe that all Federal workers are fat-cat bureaucrats who prop their feet on their desks, lean back in their soft chairs and smoke cigars all day.

Mr. Speaker, the key to deficit reduction is controlling Federal spending. And the key to controlling Federal spending is critically reviewing this Nation's spending priorities.

We need to look at where our Federal dollars are going and for what purposes they are being spent. And we cannot afford to take a myopic approach as we look for waste in the Federal budget.

While the Pentagon is allowed to spend $500 for 5-cent transistors and $1,000 for 10-cent screws, the President and some Members of Congress have done their best to salvage the rights and retirement benefits of Federal workers. The case of the Federal worker exemplifies how many innocent Americans are being made to bear the brunt of uneven and unfair deficit-reduction efforts.

I agree that Federal workers should be expected to bite the bullet, as we all must. But I am firmly convinced that the treatment Federal workers are receiving from the current administration is grossly insensitive and undeniably unjust.

Federal workers and retirees are not as well off as many people believe. Federal salaries have been capped for 8 of the last 12 years and now Federal pay is 20 percent below comparable private-sector jobs. In addition, well-deserved cost-of-living increases have been delayed for unnecessarily long periods of time.

Health care costs paid by Federal workers have increased 55 percent in the last 2 years. The Federal employees health benefits program has been the target of an unending stream of cuts. And the Office of Personnel Management has issued unworkable and uncalled for performance standards for civil service pay raises, promotions and layoffs. All in all, benefits for Federal workers and retirees have been reduced by $4 billion since 1982.

In short, I call your attention to Federal workers today because tomorrow the finger-pointing will resume and more Americans will be called upon to make unreasonable sacrifices for the huge budget deficit that we refuse to deal with responsibly.

When the President and some Members of Congress say they want to weed out Government waste, they go after Federal workers with an ax. Unfortunately, life is not so simple and Government waste is too big a problem for such a simplistic response. The biggest amount of waste in the Federal budget has nothing to do with the benefits Federal workers receive.

Federal workers must not be used as scapegoats in the budget process. After all, we don't need scapegoats to solve our problems. We need action.●

ARE GHOST TOWNS REPLACING OUR FARMS?

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, America's farmlands are one of this country's greatest resources. A nation that can feed itself need never fear foreign agricultural embargoes. However, the threat of dependence will increase if we lose our self-reliance through the erosion of our agricultural heritage.

That heritage, forged by the sweat of common Americans, still flourishes in our single family farms. However, these farms, which once were the backbone of our Nation's economy, are no longer able to sustain themselves in the face of America's increasing economic concentration. Instead, they are being swallowed up by corporate agribusinesses. This growing economic imbalance presages the death of the family farm.

According to Dr. Larry Swanson, an expert on the country's rural economy at the University of Nebraska's Center for Great Plains Studies, our farm communities are a diminishing element within society. The incorporation of American agriculture, Dr. Swanson warns, will eventually lead to the demise of many rural towns.

We cannot deny our agrarian past, for the common American's resourcefulness in developing the fertile land built our Nation. We must rejuvenate and revitalize the small farming industry. Through a conscious preservation, we can ensure that our farms and farm communities will not meet the fate of those towns which sprung up around other industries, but deteriorated into ghost towns that remain only in memory.

I wish to share with my colleagues an article which appeared in the Macomb Daily Journal, expressing concern over Dr. Swanson's findings. We should heed his warning before it is too late.

MIDWESTERN GHOST TOWNS

(By Robert Walters)

CERESCO, NE—Say goodbye to Ceresco. It may soon cease to be a functioning community.

While you're at it, bid farewell to Lime Springs, Iowa; Kranzburg, S.D.; Montezuma, Kan.; Great Bend, N.D.; and thousands of other rural towns throughout the Midwest.

Farm communities with a population of less than 900 face the very real threat of extinction, warns Dr. Larry D. Swanson, an expert on the country's rural economy at the University of Nebraska's Center for Great Plains Studies.

In recent decades, there has been considerable hand-wringing about "the disappearance of the family farms and the concomitant ascendance of massive, corporate-owned farms controlled by agribusiness interests.

Swanson has not just studied that phenomenon, however, but has analyzed its potentially devasting impact on the economic, cultural and social institutions which serve millions of the nation's rural residents.

Although Swanson has focused his research on 27 of Nebraska's most rural countries, it clearly is applicable to agricultural communities throughout the farm belt.

After reaching a peak in the 1930s, the number of farms here in the Cornhusker State has steadily declined—and with the exception of the 1970s, the rate of decline has accelerated during each of the past four decades.

In 1940, Nebraska had about 120,000 farms; today that figure has been cut almost in half, to slightly more than 80,000 farms. This year alone, an estimated 7 percent of the state's farmers—twice the normal rate of 3.5 percent—will go out of business.

"While there are encouraging signs of recovery for the economy as a whole, America's farmers still face the most serious and prolonged period of financial stress in more than 40 years," warns a report on the plight of the farm community commissioned by Nebraska Gov. Robert Kerrey.

"If there is an economic recovery, we're certainly not realizing it in this part of the country," says Erwin Matulka, a farmer in nearby Valparaiso, Neb., another town that is a candidate for extinction. "People used to be enthusiastic to get into the field. Now it seems it's a burden. It's no fun anymore."

The amount of land under cultivation in the state has declined only slightly during the past four decades, however, from 47 million acres to 46 million acres.

What has occurred is that economic power has become increasingly concentrated. Approximately 5 percent of Nebraska's farms now account for almost half the state's total agricultural production.

The average number of people living on Nebraska's farms has declined steadily, as has the state's total rural population. During the 1970s alone, Nebraska lost approximately one-fourth of all its farm residents.

The most logical source of revival for the rural economy would be an infusion of young farmers, but the economics of modern agriculture—notably the massive capital investment required and the oppressive cost of borrowing money—have discouraged potential new entrants.

The changes of past decades already have had a profound impact on rural communities. Swanson found that during the 1960s and 1970s, the number of retail stores in small towns declined by about one-third, school enrollment was reduced by about 30 percent and the male civilian labor force was cut by 18 percent as young men sought work elsewhere.

Suggesting that farmers throughout the Midwest may be trapped in a "self-perpetuating, self-reinforced and . . . somewhat self-defeating" cycle, Swanson believes there is little immediate hope for stabilizing the situation.

Instead, he foresees further disintegration and deterioration of rural communities in the coming decades. He expects that retail stores and service establishments will close and community organizations, from churches to civic groups, will be devastated by dwindling membership bases.

In less than a decade, towns throughout the region will be struggling for survival—and some almost certainly will disappear. "I think we're going to be at the back end of a major transformation of society by 1990," says Swanson, "not only in Nebraska but in the whole nation."●

EMPLOYMENT EFFECTS OF ENERGY POLICIES

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, the varying employment effects of alternative energy policies have long been a special concern of local and State policymakers. A few of us at the Federal level have also followed this issue carefully, and are aware that as long as this Nation continues to use energy inefficiently, a strategy based on providing energy through efficiency investments will create more jobs than building new electric powerplants.

The latest confirmation of this reality comes in the form of a report prepared for the Office of Conservation Programs of the Bonneville Power Administration. The report supplies preliminary estimates of the employment effects of coal and nuclear powerplant construction compared to residential energy conservation programs.

As the following table shows, the energy conservation approach is estimated to provide the BPA region with roughly 60 percent more jobs per dollar of investment than the powerplant construction approach. Moreover, when one takes into account the negative impacts of any utility investment program on ratepayers and other sectors of the local economy as measured in jobs per million kilowatthours, the report concludes that energy conservation investment will provide a net increase of two jobs—one person working full time for 1 year per million kilowatthour, whereas powerplant construction will provide a net loss of 31 jobs per million kilowatthour.

I urge my colleagues to read this report. Employment will never be the only reason to support energy conservation, but energy policymakers need to be aware of options which offer a chance to keep jobs in the community while meeting all our energy needs.

I ask unanimous consent that an article from the July 6, 1984, Seattle Times appear in the RECORD at this point:

CONSERVATION FAVORED OVER NUCLEAR PLANTS AS JOB BOOSTER

(By Bob Lane)

A Boston consulting firm has confirmed what many Northwesterners have believed for a long time: that more jobs can be created through conservation than through building power plants.

In a study for the Bonneville Power Administration, Charles River Associates of Boston said that saving 1 million kilowatt hours of electricity through conservation programs—insulation, weatherstripping and the use of insulated windows—would create two new jobs lasting a year.

Providing the same amount of energy—enough to serve 70 homes for a year—from a nuclear plant would reduce total employment by 30 jobs, the firm reported.

It calculated that conservation work would actually create 25 jobs in the insulating industry. Offsetting that gain, however, would be a loss of 23 jobs in other areas of the economy, for a net gain of two jobs.

The loss would occur because if utility customers spend money for conservation they will have less cash for other goods and services, and employment in those other areas would decline.

Turning to nuclear energy for 1 million kilowatt hours of electricity would create 30 construction jobs—more than conservation. But because nuclear-power plants cost so much, utility customers would have even less to spend in other areas, and other employment would decline by 60, for a net loss of 30, according to the consulting firm.

The Northwest Conservation Act Coalition, a group of environmental, labor and citizens' organizations, long has argued that an aggressive conservation program would do more for jobs than building a power plant.

"Some of the numbers are striking," Marc Sullivan, coalition executive director, said of the BPA report. "No investment in utilities is particularly good at creating jobs. Conservation is near zero, but thermal (nuclear and coal plants) is literally a job destroyer."

Charles River Associates said government agencies and other consultants have published similar findings.

But the firm said, "The simple numerical results of this report cannot be used to endorse one strategy over another . . ." And it noted that a decision to build a power plant doesn't depend just on the number of jobs it would create.

"The actual investment decisions will be based on a variety of economic, engineering, environmental and political considerations," the firm said.

Charles River Associates said planners also must consider the skills required by workers in evaluating the benefits of various energy programs.

Insulation workers generally are unskilled, earning about $8 an hour. But most of them are hired from the local workforce.

Nuclear-plant employees, however, are highly skilled in welding, electrical work and pipefitting and earn several times as much money. Many are construction-project followers from out of state, and hiring them would not ease local unemployment.

BPA is financing a regional conservation program through local utilities. The Northwest Power Planning Council's 20-year energy plan assumes that the region's first source of new electricity would be from conservation programs.

Charles River Associates said six Northwest utilities, some working independently of BPA, helped customers insulate and weatherize 100,000 homes through June 1983. The cost averaged between $1,400 and $2,100 per home.

Dick Perlas of BPA's conservation office said the report will not provide the basis for major changes in Bonneville programs.

"It provides useful information as to the value of conservation programs to the Northwest, in energy savings as well as in the use of local labor resources," Perlas said.

"When we are criticized for eliminating generating resources, some say it seems like we are eliminating jobs. This study shows we are creating more jobs. . . ."●

INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION AND NATIONAL SECURITY

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, for many years I have stressed the importance of the relationship between international education, and long-term national security and economic stability. I commend to the attention of my colleagues the following excerpts from a paper concerning the role of the American university in international development, which highlights an important aspect of this relationship.

As this paper points out, many American universities are involved in technical assistance to developing countries, though their role in these activities is not clearly enough defined. It is important to carefully consider the role of American educational institutions in assisting the development of Third World countries, in particular, their role in the education and training of students from developing countries.

Programs and policies relating to the education of foreign students in the United States merit careful attention for two general reasons. First, world political, economic and social issues increasingly necessitate global cooperation, and thus require improved cross-cultural communication and understanding. Student exchanges are an effective way of working toward that end. Specifically, bringing more foreign students to the United States will help these individuals, who are often the future leaders of their home countries, to develop an appreciation of American culture and values. Second, training and educating foreign students, particularly from Third World countries, is one useful approach to dealing with foreign affairs. Other countries, notably the Soviet Union, generously support foreign student study in their universities. It is important for the United States to match such efforts if the future leaders of Third World countries are to have an understanding of, and respect for, the United States.

American educational institutions should focus their technical assistance efforts on educating and training personnel from developing countries. Further, this body should facilitate such efforts by supporting educational exchanges, and giving greater consideration to programs and policies concerning the education of foreign students within the United States:

EXCERPTS FROM AMERICAN PUBLIC UNIVERSITIES: THE ROLE OF TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROJECTS IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

(By Harry G. Miller and E. Hollis Merritt)

UNIVERSITY CONSIDERATIONS FOR INVOLVEMENT IN TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

A considerable number of state supported American universities are embarking upon technical assistance activities which involve technical training and institutional building in developing countries. In the past, funding agencies and host governments have expressed concern over the ability of American universities to provide faculty who are adequately trained to work in other countries and adequate institutional resources for program delivery. For effective technical assistance programs, academic institutions must be committed and willing to adapt to program and staff needs. As a framework within which state universities may address issues related to their involvement in technical assistance programs, academic institutions must be committed and willing to adapt to program and staff needs. As a framework within which state universities may address issues related to their involvement in technical assistance projects, the following emphases and guidelines are proposed for state supported universities in their pursuit of technical assistance projects in developing countries.

1. Public universities should have a written statement within their overall mission which is agreed upon and accepted by lay governing bodies concerning their commitment to the role of international education and delivery of technical assistance activities by the institution . . .

5. Public universities should focus their programs on specific geographic areas of special international interest and should support such area studies with faculty, library holdings, support resources and degree offerings . . .

7. Public universities should be able to document their commitment to international education by the number of foreign students enrolled on campus, the number of foreign students clubs, the number of foreign student alumni, the number of faculty participating in overseas projects, the number of international education-oriented courses offered, and the number of memberships in international professional organizations . . .

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE TRAINING

. . . American public universities are a logical constituency for participants training [of developing country personnel] since they have the capability of providing the great variety of training resources needed for economic development. This is particularly true of those institutions of higher education with professional degree programs which have cultivated field relationships with industrial and other private sector organizations . . .

It is important to note that participant training can also be substituted for the other two components of development [capital development and technical aid]. The return per development dollar spent on participant training can be substantially higher than that of expenditures on capital development and technical aid. If performed well, the lasting effect through improved leadership on the part of participants in their home country is valuable. Frequently such participants are better at adapting the new technology and training to the local culture for its continued effectiveness than are external technical advisers. This means that substantially more could be spent on participant training before experience decreasing returns for additional dollar expenditures. Participant training and employment is important since most developing countries have a large and rapidly growing population that typically exists beyond the absorption rate of the labor force . . .

CONCLUSION

American public universities continue to seek to determine their proper role in the promotion of technical assistance programs in developing countries. For success, American higher education in overseas contract programs must have the respect and trust of sponsoring agencies and the developing country. Past involvements in technical assistance projects have demonstrated the need for flexibility, specialized education, unique deployment of resources and faculty, administrative commitment, a vibrant on-campus international education program, and a strong funding agency relationship.

Technical assistance projects are only one of the components for a state university's involvement in international education. Another component is the foreign student body on the campus. Other components are area studies programs, poly-cultural studies, programs of study abroad, faculty and student exchange programs, sister relationships in other countries, teaching internships in other countries, seminars and conferences on international topics and issues, training for overseas service, and tailored programs for international students and trainees. The issue of technical assistance is one of interfacing the needs and potential to the benefit of both the university and host country [emphasis added].●

CHIEF TAPSCOTT TO BE HONORED

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform my colleagues that D.C. Assistant Chief of Police Marty Tapscott will be honored by the Shaw Community Center Food Committee at its annual prayer breakfast on Saturday, August 4, 1984, at Bibleway Church located at New Jersey and New York Avenues NW. The annual prayer breakfast raises funds toward purchasing Thanksgiving baskets for needy families in the Washington area. The Shaw Center has been distributing food baskets at Thanksgiving for over 15 years. Thus far, more than 9,000 families have benefited from the project.

Chief Tapscott is one of the city's most influential and respected law enforcement officials. He has been a member of the Metropolitan Police Department since 1959. His assignments have included numerous Presidential details and demonstrations.

Chief Tapscott organized and supervised recruitment of perspective police and cadet personnel throughout the Nation, handled budgeting for the programs, the selection process, and served on the medical board. From March 1974 to November 1974, Chief Tapscott was detailed to the U.S. Virgin Islands as Deputy Chief in charge of St. Thomas and St. John District. Currently, he is Assistant Chief of Police, Field Operations Bureau. He is responsible for the seven police districts, Special Operations Division; Youth Division; and Criminal Investigations Division.

Chief Tapscott received his B.S. degree (cum laude) in administration of justice from American University. He has received a number of awards, including the Pi Alpha Alpha Honor Society, Distinguished Alumni Award from the School of Justice, the University Alumnus Award from the College of Public Affairs, and the Undergraduate Academic Achievement Award.

Mr. Speaker, Chief Tapscott, an Air Force veteran, is a member of numerous organizations, including the Shaw Food Committee, Pigskin Club of Washington, DC, Inc., Black Police Officials Association, National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives (NOBLE), and Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Police Boys' and Girls' Club. In addition, he serves as a member of the Advisory Board, School on International and Public Affairs, American University, and chairman of the Mayor's task force on emergency disaster plan.

Mr. Speaker, Chief Tapscott is an exceptional civil servant who has served his community and this Nation well.●

JUSTICE FOR CYPRUS

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues a recent statement issued by the Republic of Cyprus. Their words are clear and impassioned, and provide a succinct appraisal of the illegal occupation of Cyprus.

As the statement by the Republic of Cyprus makes clear, there has been little progress during the 10-year occupation of northern Cyprus by Turkish forces. Turkey and Turkish-Cypriot leaders have been unresponsive to the U.N. Secretary-General's efforts to resolve this issue, and during the last year Turkey has supported and encouraged developments in northern Cyprus that will lead to permanent partition of this independent nation. If the current situation on Cyprus is allowed to continue, it will have serious consequences for U.S. security interests in the eastern Mediterranean. On this, the 10th anniversary of the invasion of the island republic, it seems quite appropriate to present this statement to you:

JUSTICE FOR CYPRUS—TEN YEARS OF TURKISH OCCUPATION MUST END

Ten years ago on July 20, 1974 Turkish armed forces invaded the Republic of Cyprus, an independent state, member of the United Nations, the Council of Europe, the Commonwealth and the non-aligned movement, and seized over a third of its territory.

These forces are still there today, manning at gun point an ugly long scar across the island—an arbitrary geographical division imposed on a sovereign state whose territorial integrity was formally guaranteed in a treaty of establishment at the end of colonial rule in 1960. Ten years following the invasion, 37 percent of the Republic of Cyprus is still in the grip of 30,000 Turkish soldiers bent on imposing partition. 200,000 displaced Cypriots are still unable to return to their homes. The fate of 1,619 people missing since the invasion is still unknown.

Recent action by Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot leadership have now placed the very independence of Cyprus under serious threat.

The threat has come in the form of a secessionist move last November purporting to set up a so-called state in the areas occupied ten years ago by Turkish force of arms. The United States, noting its "deep distress", joined the rest of the world in refusing to recognize this illegal secessionist move and urging all other countries not to do so. One country alone accorded recognition: Turkey.

Over the past ten years of the Turkish military occupation of Cyprus, the government of the Republic has taken its complaint to the U.N. many times. The U.N. has repeatedly denounced Turkish plans to impose partitionist faits accomplish. The World Forum, both in the General Assembly and Security Council, has adopted unambiguous resolutions, calling for the withdrawal of troops, which continue to be ignored by Turkey.

After last November's unilateral Declaration of Independence in the areas under occupation, Cyprus took recourse again to the Security Council. The Council denounced the pseudo-state as illegal and called for reversal of the Turkish move and for the U.N. members to deny recognition to the so-called State.

In total disregard of the resolution, Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot leadership in the occupied areas showed their scorn for the world organization by ceremonially exchanging ambassadors last April, on the very day the Secretary-General's special representative arrived in Cyprus on a peace initiative. To compound matters the Turkish side also announced plans for a referendum on a new constitution for the "State", to be followed by general elections.

In May, yet another urgent meeting of the Security Council was called by Cyprus against these Turkish moves. During the debate the Turkish Cypriot leadership, along with Turkey's delegate, spoke at length, seeking to justify their deeds. The Security Council was not convinced, and another even tougher resolution condemning the exchange of "ambassadors", as well as all secessionist actions, declaring them illegal and invalid and calling for their withdrawal, was overwhelmingly adopted. Turkey ignored this resolution also.

While the U.N. Secretary-General contemplates his next move to implementing the most recent U.N. Resolution, Cyprus is marking the 10th anniversary of the Turkish invasion with an appeal to American and international public opinion.

The continuing tragedy of Cyprus affects all peace-loving peoples. We are confident that our appeal will strike a responsive chord among those who care for the fundamental principles of justice, the rule of international law and respect for human rights.●

SOCIAL SECURITY "NOTCH" PROBLEM

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, for those of us who are concerned about the Social Security "notch" problem, the past few months have been particularly frustrating. Legislation has been introduced in Congress to rectify this unfair situation, yet the issue has not yet come before the full House for a vote.

I am distressed by this inaction, and I urge my colleagues on the House Subcommittee on Social Security to take action and hold hearings on the notch problem. In particular, H.R. 4093 deserves immediate consideration because this bill effectively eliminates the notch by extending the transition period and making benefit calculations more generous for those citizens born after 1916. This legislation has been carefully constructed to return a sense of fairness to our Social Security system.

There is no good reason why H.R. 4093 should remain stalled for so long in the Subcommittee on Social Security. Nearly 60 of my colleagues have joined me in cosponsoring this important legislative initiative, and it enjoys widespread support throughout Congress.

I have heard from thousands of constituents on this issue and they, too, demand action. It is not enough for Congress to merely identify a problem—we must solve this serious problem by passing legislation that will give millions of Americans the Social Security benefits they earned and deserve.●

HEALTH CARE CONSUMER INFORMATION

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit for the record an article that appeared in the New York Times on July 17, 1984, entitled "Doctors' Lobby Facing Unsolicited Second Opinion."

Mr. Speaker, this article points out very succinctly and clearly what's at issue with title V of H.R. 5602, the Health Professions and Services Amendments of 1984. What's at issue, quite simply, is the fact that consumers need to get a handle on their health care costs. But they can't without the sufficient information.

With the Nation spending $360 billion this year on health care costs, we need to bring the consumers into the health care cost containment effort in a meaningful way.

The health care consumer information title of H.R. 5602, title V, will enable health care purchasers to do just this.

Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues this informative article.

The article follows:

DOCTORS' LOBBY FACING UNSOLICITED 2D OPINIONS

(By Joel Brinkley)

WASHINGTON, July 16.—The American Medical Association, long one of Washington's most powerful political lobbies, is accustomed to getting its way when medical issues come before Congress. But the days of such dominance may be ending.

More and more often, the nation's doctors are finding themselves confronted by a broad and powerful coalition of business and industry groups arguing the other side of a given issue. These are the people who pay most of the nation's medical bills, and they say they are finally getting "the courage" to oppose "an organization as powerful as the A.M.A.," as one coalition member said recently.

The latest confrontation is over a rather innocuous amendment to an obscure bill before Congress. If passed as written, the amendment would create no new jobs. It would add not a dime to the Federal budget. And, its author, Representative Ron Wyden, Democrat of Oregon, says it would cause the Government "to collect not one snippet of paper."

Nonetheless, Mr. Wyden's little amendment is causing a storm.

THE COST OF HEALTH CARE

The central issue is the ever-surging cost of health care, which is certainly a controversial topic. But Mr Wyden's seven-paragraph amendment addresses it only indirectly.

The proposal would require the Department of Health and Human Services to study the best way to compare the cost and quality of health care and to make that research available to the public.

"It would require them to provide some technical assistance to purchasers of health care so they can go out and make comparisons and smart purchases on their own," Mr. Wyden said.

The theory is that this is the only way health-care costs can be brought down, if consumers shop around for prices and services and force doctors to compete for patients.

Under the amendment, the department would not actually compare the cost or quality of health care. It would merely develop guidelines that business and consumer groups could use to make comparisons themselves.

"Really, the Wyden amendment is very limited, very small," said Sharon Canner, an associate director with the National Association of Manufacturers, which supports the amendment.

However, she added, "It's representative of a larger issue." That issue, proponents say, is the medical community's longstanding reluctance to release certain comparative information about the cost and quality of health care.

But to the American Medical Association, Mr. Wyden's proposal "is just an inappropriate bill all around," said William E. Small of the Washignton office. "We oppose it," he said.

The A.M.A. says statistical information comparing doctors and hospitals can be misleading. "And there's just a general problem with what they are going to do with the aggregate information under this amendment, how they are going to interpret it," Mr. Small said.

Representative Wyden acknowledges that A.M.A. opposition can be formidable. The association's political action committee is the nation's third oldest, and most years it spends more money than all but one or two others. It usually gets its way.

But the business coalition is changing the equation. Businesses and industries, after all, are the largest purchasers of health care; it is estimated that they spend $100 billion a year on health benefits for their employees. And "for years, employers just paid whatever bills they were given;" Mrs. Canner said.

As they tired of paying higher and higher health-care bills they could not control, businesses began forming consortiums about 10 years ago, thinking they ought to have some say in the nation's health policies.

One of the first, the Washington Business Group on Health, now represents about 250 of the nation's largest corporations, and when it advocates an issue, Congress has little choice but to listen.

As Willis Goodbeck, the group's president, likes to point out, "Our members annually purchase the medical benefits for nearly 50 million employees, retirees and their dependents." That is more than 20 percent of the population of the United States.

Several times in the past couple of years, the Washington Business Group on Health and the A.M.A. have found themselves lobbying opposite sides of an issue, and "We've never lost," Mr. Goldbeck boasted.

Mr. Small of the A.M.A. says his association has noticed that it has a new and powerful adversary. But, he says, sometimes the two sides agree.

Mrs. Canner, of the manufacturers' association, which represents 13,500 businesses and corporations, agreed. But she also said: "Business is becoming convinced of its power. Businesses are the ones that pay the health bills, and they are beginning to have the courage to get involved in coalitions to oppose an organization as powerful as the A.M.A."

Mrs. Canner's organization has joined forces with Mr. Goldbeck's and a variety of other business, labor and consumer groups to advocate passage of Mr. Wyden's amendment.

In May the House Energy and Commerce Committee, voting 23 to 1, adopted the Health Manpower Reauthorization Act, which includes the Wyden proposal. The bill now awaits consideration by the full House. The Health and Human Services Department has not taken a public position on the amendment.

Mr. Small said he did not believe the A.M.A. would mount a major lobbying campaign against the amendment, though it has made its position clearly known on Capitol Hill, Members of Mr. Wyden's staff said they did not think the A.M.A. could defeat the proposal on the House floor, though they said they were afraid of what might happen in a conference committee with the Senate.

"Whatever happens," Mrs. Canner said, "what you see with this coalition is only the beginning."

"I think you are going to see more and more of this," she said. "The Wyden amendment is just one of the first examples."●

SOCIAL SECURITY THE NEW REALISM

HON. J. J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, last week the President announced that he favored a cost-of-living increase for Social Security beneficiaries this year. This is the same news conference where the President declared he wanted to reduce spending instead of raising taxes. Within moments, the President contradicted himself by recommending this cost-of-living increase which both increases spending and taxes. As I've noted, this will cost the Treasury about $5 billion and will also result in an increase in the Social Security taxes for many American workers and employers.

Apparently, the White House was hoping this would go unnoticed or that it didn't really matter. But it does matter, and the public is starting to catch on because the press is beginning to catch on. This "new realism" is evidenced by the following articles which I would like to insert in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues.

[From the USA Today, Aug. 1, 1984]

POLITICIANS HAND OUT ELECTION-YEAR CANDY

It happens every election year. The mere thought of facing the voters can turn a politician into a Sugar Daddy.

Take Social Security. It's a big hunk of sugar.

Last week, President Reagan announced that he might ask Congress to spread some of that sugar around by passing a quickie law that would give 36.5 million Social Security recipients a cost-of-living increase.

Now that's a sweet thought. The U.S. Senate jumped at the idea. Within two days, the senators voted 87 to 3 to strip $5 billion from the Social Security trust fund next year and give each individual on Social Security $12 a month.

That's pretty shoddy sugar they're handing out.

And it's irresponsible. The national budget deficit is approaching $200 billion. And the annual price tag of Social Security represents 20 percent of all federal spending.

This cost-of-living increase will trigger another immediate rise in the Social Security tax. It could set a precedent threatening the future of the Social Security system.

Only last year, Congress acted responsibly by providing stability for the system's trust fund. But that was not an election year.

Sure, many of the nation's elderly are hurting. Many live on fixed incomes. One out of every seven lives in poverty. But the law states specifically when they are to receive Social Security cost-of-living increases. It is supposed to happen when the inflation rate goes over three percent.

That isn't going to happen this year. But with the election so near, the Senate wants to give the increase anyway. And the House of Representatives is expected to follow the Senate and take on the Sugar Daddy role next week.

Senators rationalized their action this way: The inflation rate is nearing three percent. It probably will go over that amount next year. So why wait to hand out election-year fudge?

The reason to wait is because Congress worked so hard last year to make the trust fund safe. It is senseless to risk that security—just because politicians are worried about their security.

It is true that the nation's elderly vote in huge numbers—almost 70 percent of those between the ages of 64 and 70 went to the polls in November, 1980. And if there is no cost-of-living adjustment next year, the announcement will come in late October—a few days before the election. So the politicians are looking for candy to pass around to the nation's old people.

It is insulting to them. And it is shameful to suggest that they are willing to risk the future of Social Security for a political payoff of $12 a month.

Social Security is not political candy. And the sight of politicians playing Sugar Daddy and spoon feeding the nation's elderly is enough to make the voters sick.

[From the Dallas Morning News, July 28, 1984]

SOCIAL SECURITY VOTE: IT'S CORRUPTION

The Republican administration and Senate Democrats are elbowing each other for credit for the Social Security vote Thursday. The vote would guarantee that Social Security recipients will get more money on New Year's Day, whether or not the inflation rate is high enough to justify a boost in the cost-of-living allowance.

The politicians are seeking credit for offering to elderly voters what amounts to a bribe.

President Reagan had announced that he would ask for the increase at his TV press conference Tuesday. Democratic Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan stole a march on the White House by quickly introducing a bill to hand out the extra money. Of the 90 senators voting, only three brave souls voted nay.

If anyone, old or young, retired or working, Republican or Democrat, wants a demonstration of the reason why the Social Security program is in trouble, here it is. What we have just seen is a replay of the sort of election year bidding war for the Social Security vote that has virtually bankrupted the system.

That system was originally sold to American workers as a form of old-age and retirement insurance that would furnish the elderly a minimum income, firmly based on the amounts they had previously paid into it.

Instead, electioneering politicians of both parties have regularly used the system as a gigantic slush fund with which to buy votes during their campaigns. That is precisely what has happened here.

The express purpose of indexing benefits to the inflation rate in 1972 was to prevent this from happening every other year. Henceforth, we were told, linkage of benefits to the cost of living would hold safe the retired, sparing them the ravages of inflation, and avoiding the political temptations for vote-buying.

Yet such temptations are apparently irresistible on both sides of the aisle, in the White House as in Congress. Short-circuiting the system lets politicians of every stripe say to those getting Social Security, "Thanks to me, you'll be getting about $20 more per month next year."

The unsaid quid pro quo, of course, is " . . . so now be sure and vote for me."

This is happened so often and with such disastrous effect on the Social Security system that millions of younger Americans have lost confidence that it will be there when they reach retirement age.

The political logic underlying this bipartisan vote for ante-raising is quite understandable: When such a campaign scheme is proposed, any incumbent politician who does not instantly vote to hand out the money is condemned for "hating old people," for "trying to balance the budget on the backs of the elderly."

Yet the upshot of this long series of vote buys with other people's money is a system so shaky that one rescue attempt after another must be launched to save it. And "rescue" generally means taking more and more Social Security tax out of the earned income of younger generations that are less and less hopeful that the system will be around when they need it.

Social Security was supposed to be a return to retired Americans of income based on what they had paid into the system while working—an insurance plan, not a welfare handout. That it is today viewed less and less as the former, more and more as the latter, is the direct result of such episodes as we have seen in Washington this week.

We are being asked by both parties to view this as an act of conscience. In truth, it is merely another step in the corruption of what was once a sound and respectable program.

[From the Dallas Times Herald July 27, 1984]

GOOD POLITICS, BAD POLICY

President Reagan seems to be counting votes more than dollars these days. How else does one explain the President's vow to seek an increase in Social Security benefits in the face of a $180 billion-a-year budget deficit?

Mr. Reagan wants Congress to give Social Security recipients a cost-of-living adjustment next January even if the past year's inflation turns out to be less than 3 percent. Under current law, recipients are entitled to an increase in benefits only if inflation exceeds 3 percent.

Such a proposal makes good political sense, to be sure. The Democrats have cast the President as the No. 1 enemy of the Social Security system. What better way for him to deflect the criticism than to advocate this out-of-the-ordinary increase in Social Security spending?

But while good politics, Mr. Reagan's proposal would be bad policy. A cost-of-living adjustment would cost taxpayers about $1.8 billion for every percentage point. Thus, if the inflation rate were 2.8 percent, the cost-of-living increase would total $5 billion.

That is no trifling sum. If the President wants Congress to cut spending to reduce the deficit, he should not be calling for this major new drain on the Treasury. As much as he may like to give one of his constituencies this election-year plum, Mr. Reagan cannot be allowed to have it both ways.

Abiding by the present Social Security law is not asking too much of the nation's elderly. Economists widely acknowledge that for years retirees were overcompensated for inflation by the cost-of-living adjustment formula. No matter what happens next January, Social Security beneficiaries will remain well ahead of the inflation of the past decade.

The President's proposal probably will be applauded by some, but in fact it is terribly shortsighted. Doesn't Mr. Reagan care that his administration's awesome budget deficit threatens to send both the elderly and their offspring into the economic doldrums again?

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 1, 1984]

PANDERING TO THE ELDERLY

(By Terry Hartle)

Those who believe it takes the federal government too long to accomplish anything should take heart. Less than a week after President Reagan suggested increasing Social Security pension benefits, the Senate voted to approve the idea, and the House is poised to go along. It appears that the pensioners will get the money without any delay at all.

That's the good news. The bad news is that this election year gambit will cost about $5 billion and will undermine the Social Security rescue package that was so carefully put together just a year ago. In the process, politicians of both parties have resorted to the time-honored practice of buying votes with public policy.

A bit of history is necessary. Between 1952 and 1971, Congress increased Social Security benefits seven times—frequently in election years, as Congress sought to curry favors with the voters. The highlight (or low light) of this approach occurred in 1972 when Rep. Wilbur Mills pushed through a 20 percent increase in benefits. Congress also adopted a provision that tied benefits to the change in the consumer price index. Mills, who was considered an expert on Social Security financing, promised that the changes were "actuarily sound."

But by the mid 1970s, Social Security began to falter. More money was paid out than was taken in, and the fiscal surplus in the trust fund evaporated. In 1977, Congress passed a "rescue" to guarantee that the system would be financially sound until 2030. By 1983, however, it was painfully apparent that the rescue operation had failed, and another rescue was mounted, this one led by a bipartisan commission.

Everything worked well for about a year. But a few months ago Treasury Secretary Donald Regan suggested that it might be necessary to revise the benefit structure sometime in the future. More recently, President Reagan said that some changes might have to be made eventually to ensure the solvency of the system.

Neither suggested when the reappraisal would be necessary or what he had in mind.

But the Democrats used this to accuse the Republicans of wanting to take a hatchet to Social Security.

Such criticism was a real problem. Social Security is the nation's biggest and most important domestic program; over 36 million Americans benefit from it. Moreover, the elderly are much more likely to vote than the general population. No politician in his right mind wants to be on the wrong side of this issue.

To counter the Democrats' charges, Reagan suggested adjusting Social Security benefits upward to match the modest change in the consumer price index, an increase now estimated at 2.9 percent. The proposal was necessary because a little-noticed clause enacted in 1972 provided that no cost of living increase would be paid in any year when the inflation rate fell below 3 percent. (The provision was little noticed because an inflation of 3 percent has seemed unthinkable in the last decade.)

But in 1984 it appears that the change in the consumer price index will fall below this trigger. Politicians hate a benefit vacuum, and President Reagan rushed to fill this one. The Republican-controlled Senate, perhaps fearful of being tarred with the same brush the Democrats used on Reagan, voted 86 to 3 to endorse the proposal.

Political analysts praised Reagan's initiative as a master stroke: in a single move he undercut the Democratic criticism that he was after Social Security.

But the political analysts have not been so quick to point out the costs of this effort. The first, of course, is money. It will take about $5 billion to finance this increase, a substantial amount even by federal standards when the deficit is estimated at $170 billion.

Proponents of the increase claim that this amount is not as large as it seems because the inflation factor is cumulative. That is, if next year's increase were 4 percent, it would be added to this year's 2.9 percent for a total payment increase of 6.9 percent. In other words, this year's increase would be paid sooner or later.

Such ingenious reasoning simply ignores the long-term cost of spending $5 billion this year. Moreover, the provision limiting benefit increases when inflation falls below 3 percent does reduce budget outlays in a program whose financial stability has been a source of grave concern. To forget those very recent problems just as the election approaches is fiscally irresponsible.

An equally important issue is whether this will lead to competition to provide more generous benefits. House Democrats are not likely to let Reagan take credit for increasing benefits; they may well demand a bigger increase. Since Reagan is unlikely to veto a benefit change so close to the election, his modest proposal may provoke a bidding war, with both parties scrambling to provide the most generous benefits.

But the bigger question is whether these efforts will lead us back to the old days when election year benefit increases were commonplace. Such a system would help the elderly in the short run—but probably benefit no one in the long run since it would undermine the financial health of the system.

Of course, the politicians derive some gain from this. They can accommodate an important special interest that relies heavily on the federal government. And, since few members of Congress pay Social Security taxes, they can provide the benefits without having to foot the bill themselves.●

POSTAL SERVICE CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to decry the recent actions of the Reagan appointee dominated board of the U.S. Postal Service in making a unilateral decision on pay for future hires of the Postal Service. The Postal Service has decided that it is going to implement its most recent contract offer which would create a divisive two-tiered system of compensation distinguishing between current employees and new hires. Two-tiered employment systems are divisive, unfair, and extremely detrimental to employee morale. Rarely are contract negotiations pleasant affairs. But the Postal Service's actions go beyond the usual posturing of collective bargaining. With this act, the Postal Service is not conducting itself in a manner that conforms to the statutory standard of good faith, the standard in all collective bargaining sessions.

In 1982, as chair of the Subcommittee on Postal Personnel and Modernization, I conducted extensive joint hearings on the effectiveness of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970. Mr. Speaker, at no time during that lengthy review of the act did we encounter, consider, or anticipate a situation such as this. The Postal Reorganization Act clearly states that collective bargaining is up to the Postal Service and the employee representatives. The act also clearly intends that these parties are to be equal partners in this process.

Postal employees were given the right to bargain collectively for labor contracts, but were not given the right to strike. The clear intention of the act was that the status quo—that is, the contract provisions that the employees are presently working under—should remain in effect until the parties have come to agreement on the terms of a new contract. The drafters of the Postal Reorganization Act did not envision a Postal Board of Governors with such audacious contempt for its employees that it would act in such a callous manner. If so, then certainly the act would have stated expressly, rather than by implication, that unilateral moves are against the policy of the act. The Postal Service alleges that its action does not violate the letter of the Postal Reorganization Act. But with 6 years as a member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and 5 years as Chair of one of its subcommittees, it is my contention that the Postal Service's action is certainly violative of the spirit and policy of the act.

The Postal Service has decided to make this move at a time when the Postal Service is experiencing a robust financial health. The Postal Service is doing so well financially they have postponed an expected first-class rate increase. The Postal Service is so pleased with itself that it is giving out bonuses to management to the tune of $10,000 to $20,000. The Postmaster General himself will get a bonus of $62,000. The Postal Service has recently bought a jet for the use of the Postmaster General and other top officials. The reason why postal management is lavishing such generous rewards on itself is that the Postal Service is in the best financial health in its history with volume and revenues at all time highs.

That is why it is absolutely incomprehensible why the Postal Service is trying to freeze worker salaries and reduce pay for new hires. It is these very people, and not those who sit behind desks at postal headquarters, who are primarily responsible for the United States having the lowest postal rates in the free world.

What the Reagan dominated Postal Board of Governors is saying is clear, and that is that only those at the top of the Postal Service's massive bureaucracy should benefit from the dedicated efforts of its rank and file employees. These employees, the most productive postal employees in the world, are being told that they do not deserve to share in the fruits of their labor.

I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing this action by the Postal Service and speaking out to ensure that the intent of the Congress, in passing the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, is not violated.●

DISASTROUS IMPACT OF THE ADMINISTRATION'S TAX POLICIES ON BUSINESS AND THE CONSUMER

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received a letter from Dr. Walter S. Mason, president of Best Western International, the Nation's largest association of independently owned and operated hotels, motels and resorts. The firm has 82,000 employees nationwide and is headquartered in Phoenix, AR.

Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism I have a direct concern for the lodging industry. I cite Dr. Mason's letter as irrefutable evidence of the artificially stimulated building boom which has swept this country since the passage of TEFRA and the proliferation of the industrial development bond beginning in 1981. When the president of one of America's largest small business industries—lodging—and who is located in the allegedly booming Sun Belt, writes to Congress to warn of impending catastrophe in the building trade it is time for the administration to wake up and take notice.

For several months now trade journals have been filled with stories of acres of prime office space lying fallow in cities throughout this country. For several years now we have witnessed an unprecedented building surge financed by investors suddenly drawn to tax shelters and partnership schemes resulting in the overbuilding of hotels, offices, and development parks throughout this country. This overbuilding is obviously demonstrated by the lack of customers and tenants in many hundreds of these structures. You have to read Dr. Mason's letter for a vivid report of the desperate state of one such over-built industry.

The overbuilding is a result of a false growth due to tax necessity inspired by the new need to seek and use tax shelters and loopholes for corporate and individual profit. The truest form of American capitalism, namely the pure and simple response by a seller to a consumer's needs, has been perverted by current tax policies into a simple course of investment designed to take advantage of tax breaks, tax loopholes and tax shelters. And of course, Mr. Speaker, as we have seen with greater frequency of late, the true cost of these charades will be borne by none other than the recipient of the magnanimous policies—the ever present average American consumer.

The average American loses on the tax breaks as the financial rewards for those investors are drawn directly from his pocket in new taxes and fees. He will lose again on the vacancy rate of the buildings which he has unknowingly financed by paying increased local and municipal taxes to compensate for the inevitable property tax waivers received by the owners of those structures. And lastly, but perhaps most poignantly of all, Mr. Speaker, the average American won't even have a room in which to stay in the event that he should ever want to inspect his vast inventory of vacant, gleaming new buildings which dot the national landscape and which have been paid for by his tax dollars.

Mr. Speaker, this situation is intolerable and it is one which must be rectified.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Mason's letter follows:

BEST WESTERN INTERNATIONAL

JULY 27, 1984.

Hon. JAMES J. FLORIO,
House of Representatives, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. FLORIO: Your help is needed! Lodging, one of America's largest and finest small business industries, is in severe jeopardy. Many formerly successful hotellers are now struggling to avoid bankruptcy because of the abuse of local and national economic aid programs.

As president of America's (and the world's) largest association of independently owned and operated hotels, motor inns and resorts, I urgently appeal to you for immediate action to prevent the over-building of unneeded and unwanted lodging facilities throughout the country. Mercenary investors are sheltering vast sums by building facilities which are not warranted by market conditions or even the most optimistic feasibility studies.

This excess inventory of rooms is creating disaster for all.

As small business people, we firmly support the American system of free enterprise. We do not seek—as many do—legislation to restrict competition; we feel the office of government is not to give people happiness, but, rather, to enable them to work it out for themselves. However, this is not a matter of healthy, competitive marketing, but a serious over-building that will bankrupt all lodging.

Attached are a few fast facts and hard case histories that already have resulted from heedless over-expansion. In simple terms, Mr. Florio, the problem is that developers, often funded by investor groups seeking tax shelters, are entering unknown markets armed with shallow feasibility studies containing insufficient or inaccurate data about that area's growth trends and occupancy rates. Also, many cities, eager for downtown development and convention business, are encouraging new construction by extending industrial revenue bonds, low-interest tax-exempt loans to help finance hotels. Other money is available through Urban Development Action Grants, federally-funded grants for cities needing assistance with urban renewal.

Your thorough examination of this issue on all levels—national, regional and local—as well as a review of our country's tax benefits system is much needed. You will want to guarantee that tax benefits are used as intended and not abused for tax shelter purposes. For a healthy lodging industry in America, it is essential that decisions about expansion and growth are based upon good, credible information and that the investment in lodging is made to serve real demand and not on whims or to shelter gains from other sources.

On behalf of 1,887 Best Western small business people and their 82,000 employees, I thank you for your intercession and await your response and action.

Sincerely,

DR. WALTER S. MASON, Jr.,
President.

TOO MUCH ROOM AT THE INN

PHOENIX, ARIZONA (June 20, 1984).—The Grand Junction, Colorado, City Council has agreed to issue $10 million in low-interest industrial revenue bonds for a new downtown hotel—despite the fact that during the past year three Grand Junction hotels have declared bankruptcy, five have closed their doors and more than 200 hotel employees have lost their jobs.

Three years ago, the average hotel occupancy rate in Grand Junction was 85 percent for 1,410 rooms. Since 1981, 874 more rooms have been built while occupancy rates have plummeted to 26 percent. Local motel association officials fear the new downtown hotel's additional 180 rooms, plus a proposed 240-room property near Grand Junction's airport, will be devastating to their business.

Best Western members cite the saturation of hotel rooms throughout the country:

Elk City, Oklahoma: "During an oil boom in 1981-82, rooms in Elk City tripled when about twelve new properties were built, largely by out-of-town developers," says Marvin Swinehart, owner of the Best Western Elk City Inn. "Then the boom went bust. Today we have an 85-unit Ramada Inn closed up and in bankruptcy, a 175-unit Hospitality Inn that's boarded up, a 20-room property closed and, in a nearby town, a 100-room hotel has shut its doors.

"The local Holiday Inn has reported 30-40 percent occupancy and our business has fallen 75 percent," says Swinehart. "The going rate of a one/bedroom unit in Elk City is between $9.95 and $16.95."

Belton, Texas: Tom Elliott, owner of the Best Western River Forest Motel, reports, "If I had debt service on my motel, I'd be looking to get out. We have four new properties coming in now and I have less than 50 percent occupancy. Out-of-town developers are building for tax shelters where there isn't a need.

Liberal, Kansas: "Most of the town is running under 50 percent occupancy and they're building another 80-100 room property here. That'll hurt somebody," says Lloyd Lundy, owner of Liberal's Best Western LaFonda.

Goodland, Kansas: "In peak travel season, the Best Western Buffalo has only 41 out of 95 rooms rented. Three other properties are nowhere near 50 percent occupied," reports Lundy.

Hays, Kansas: "There's talk of four new properties coming in to Hays where we already have four hotels," says Lundy. "And two new projects are being built just 23 miles east of here."

South Burlington, Vermont: "We've had only a three precent increase in occupancy during the past year," says Best Western Redwood's Greg Premo, "and there are three new projects on the boards. One is seeking federal funds for development and it looks as though the city will comply."

Ft. Collins, Colorado: "We have a classic example in Ft. Collins," says Bob Peterson of the Best Western Exit 254 Inn in nearby Loveland. "There are five hotels all on one intersection at the interstate (highway), and three more are planned for downtown. I think this has to be a tax write-off situation—there's not that much market for conventions here.●

FEDERAL DEFICIT REDUCTIONS

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, my No. 1 economic concern is the huge Federal deficit. When the House considered a budget for fiscal year 1985, I supported an innovative deficit-reduction plan that would cut the deficit by $250 billion over the next 3 years. The concept behind this plan is a freeze on Federal spending combined with rigorous enforcement of the pay-as-you-go principle.

I know that many of my colleagues share my views on this crucial issue and agree that Congress must promote fiscal responsibility in the budget process and bring about a more balanced approach to Federal spending.

Today, the House is considering the Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support this bill because it provides valuable, cost-efficient funding for proven Federal programs at fiscally responsible levels. In fact, this bill will result in a $1.7 billion savings from last year's appropriations. This is a prefect example of the genuine deficit reduction this country needs.

Although this legislation affects several important domestic programs, I am particularly pleased by what it accomplishes in two vital areas: Encouraging education excellence and enhancing our efforts to combat drug abuse.

The quality of American education must be improved. The average achievement by high school students on standardized tests is significantly lower today than it was 20 years ago. We have 23 million adults in this country who are functionally illiterate, and 13 percent of all 17-year-olds may be functionally illiterate. It is estimated that 40 percent of all 17-year-olds cannot draw inferences from written material, and only 20 percent can write a persuasive essay. In addition, American students finished last 7 times—and never first or second—on 19 different tests comparing student achievement among students in different countries. In the face of these failures, the Reagan administration has spent the last 3 years cutting Federal spending for education by 25 percent and slashing aid for college students by 21 percent.

The bill before us today helps undo some of the damage that has been done. Necessary funding is restored for elementary and secondary education, vocational, handicapped, and adult education, and student financial assistance. Although education is primarily a local and State issue, we have a duty to do what we can to enhance the quality of education our children receive.

Finally, I am gratified that this bill will significantly upgrade the research being done on alcoholism and drug abuse. As Chairman of the Task Force on International Narcotics Control and as a member of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime, I know first-hand how drug trafficking and drug abuse are rampant in the United States.

Drug abuse costs this country $100 billion each year and $80 billion of this comes from drug-related crime. In the last 15 years, there has been a tragic increase in drug use by those between the ages of 16 and 24. Now, we find that this age group is the only group in America where the mortality rate is increasing rather than decreasing. We cannot afford to let these trends continue.

We must bolster our efforts to confront and combat the drug problem in all its dimensions. We must win the war against drugs in the streets, in the schools, and in the workplace. This bill represents a significant step in this direction.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of this legislation. It is a fiscally responsible response to the needs and concerns of this Nation.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, while the House of Representatives was completing consideration of H.R. 11, the Education Act amendments, an amendment was adopted to allow moments of individual silent prayer in public schools. I regret that I was unable to be present to vote against this amendment.

This is not what our Founding Fathers intended when drafting the Constitution. Religious freedom is one of the essential ingredients making our country great and keeping it free. It allows Americans the opportunity to freely exercise their religious beliefs without fear of Government intrusion. Free speech is guaranteed to all Americans under our Constitution. This also means that religious freedom is protected. There is no law in this country that prohibits any student from saying a silent prayer at any time of the day if they so desire. However, our Constitution does not state that public schools are supposed to allow or teach the practice of religion.

Historically, our Nation's public schools have been a unifying force among children by emphasizing the characteristics they have in common rather than those by which they are separated and they should remain this way.●

DRUGS ARE THE SCOURGE OF AMERICA: MAYOR KOCH'S ADDRESS TO THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic National Convention was filled with enthusiasm and rejoicing. We Democrats have good cause for celebration, with Walter Mondale and my neighbor from Queens, Geraldine Ferraro, heading up the ticket.

Underlying all the revelry, though, was a discussion of many serious issues, an awareness of how tough life under Reaganomics has been for millions for Americans. Edward Koch, mayor of the city of New York, and a former Member of Congress, knows all too well how many residents of our great cities, and especially our young people, have had to struggle. In his speech to the convention, the mayor clearly and vigorously called our Nation to action against the epidemic of narcotics. "Drugs are the scourge of America," he warned. The alarming increase in narcotics use is undoubtedly related to the despair and frustration that have gripped this country.

I urge my colleagues to heed Mayor Koch's words, and consider his proposals for striking at the heart of drug smuggling operations. I am pleased to make his remarks a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

REMARKS BY EDWARD I. KOCH, DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION, SAN FRANCISCO, CA, MONDAY, JULY 16, 1984

The sting of Vietnam still affects our foreign policy decisions. Our failures in Lebanon will dominate the coming Presidential debates.

If America is willing to risk so much in defense of other nations, why does she refuse to defend herself?

One of the most massive military build-ups in the history of mankind has taken place under the current administration.

Why then do these resources remain idle while America is under attack?

The Commander In Chief's first priority is to defend the Union—yet the casualities mount, the destruction continues and the threat grows—as we surrender our civilization to the overwhelming flow of deadly drugs into this country.

If you think I have overstated the issue, you are gravely mistaken. Physically, emotionally or economically drugs have either directly or indirectly affected the lives of most Americans.

I have never pleaded a public cause with more conviction and urgency than I now bring to the utterly desperate problem of the narcotics traffic in American cities. I am here to enlist our party's moral indignation and support for a strategic program to deal with it honestly and effectively. I propose that we draw on our enormous military resources in this time of peace to secure our own borders and curtail the flow of dangerous drugs into this country. The proposition is straightforward. The army should dust-off some of the sophisticated technology we have purchased through huge Defense Budgets to do all that is constitutionally permissible to stop drug shipments from crossing our borders. The Air Force, I'm sure, is a match for even the most advanced air smugglers. If the Navy and the Coast Guard can't adequately control the sea-bound drug traffickers, how secure can we possibly be from terrorists and foreign invaders.

Last week when it was announced that I would address this convention on the desperate need for greater drug enforcement, President Reagan's Chief Drug Advisor, Dr. Carlton Turner, challenged my criticism of the administration's efforts by saying New York doesn't have a "monopoly" on drug problems. I wish for the rest of the country's sake the crisis had been so confined, but the dimensions of the problem are staggering.

There are 500,000 heroin addicts in this country, and 190,000 of them live in New York City. Now that may not be a monopoly but neither is it a restraint of trade. Twenty-five million Americans have used cocaine at least once, and 25% of these are regular abusers. During the last five years in New York, the number of cocaine users has tripled. Every day, 5,000 more Americans become cocaine users.

Drugs are the scourge of America. They are a menace which cuts across every social class and economic subgroup. From the prep schools of Connecticut, the board rooms of some of our largest corporations, and the glittering world of professional athletes and celebrities to the dead end precincts of the poor and dispossessed, narcotics indiscriminately destroy lives and families.

But the greatest impact is always felt by the poor. The very people who most need a stable environment in which to build their lives instead find themselves besieged by an army of addicts who steal and destroy what little they own.

If the Russians were doing this to us, we would be in a state of war. As it is, something even worse is happening, by our government's own indifference it has raised the flag of surrender.

Heroin and cocaine are not acts of nature, like hurricanes or tornadoes. They are not unavoidable plagues. We know where they come from. We can watch them being sold openly on our streets. The misery and the death they cause are reported every day in our press. And yet it goes on, and on, and on!

Heroin and other dangerous drugs represent a foreign invasion of America. Repelling foreign invasions is the primary responsibility of the federal government. But we lack the kind of national leadership that is needed to stop the drug epidemic. True leadership takes commitment, requires initiative and above all means action as well as words. The President once tried to shackle this party with what he cleverly called a "misery index". His inaction and ineffectiveness in dealing with the drug epidemic in America should be measured in terms of "tragedy" rather than "misery".

A "tragedy index" would measure infiltration rather than inflation and the calculation would be shocking. An avalanche of four metric tons of heroin, 48 metric tons of cocaine and 12,000 metric tons of marijuana is smuggled, largely with impunity, into this country each year. These figures translate into 987 million doses of heroin, 745 million tins of cocaine, and 37 billion marijuana cigarettes. The aggregate estimated street value of all three categories of this contraband is $80 billion.

A "tragedy index" would look to a deficit even more appalling than the one this country now faces each year. It would have to account for the hundreds of billions of dollars worth of property crimes—burglaries, robberies, muggings—that directly finance the estimated 80-90 billion dollars worth of drugs sold each year on our streets.

What has been the Reagan answer to perhaps the number one domestic challenge to America: loud talk—no muscle.

The President has proposed to reduce the Custom Inspectors at Ports of Entry by 600 out of a total force of only 4,500.

Such a cut is extraordinary in view of his own narcotics enforcement Chief's public admission that he has but 2,000 agents worldwide and by his own estimate, needs a minimum force of 100,000 agents to have a significant impact on the drug trade.

The President claimed he would use the military to help detect drug traffickers where necessary. Yet, there is no effective radar surveillance system being used to detect drug flights over our southern coasts.

Defense and Treasury continue to fight as to who has jurisdiction (neither wants it) so our borders remain wide open to drug merchants.

The Coast Guard has only 7-10 boats patrolling the Southeastern Coast and the Gulf of Mexico—a principal drug trafficking corridor.

Incredibly, we are the most technologically sophisticated military power in the world, and yet our meager border police have no lookdown, low altitude radar, no interceptor jets or high speed turboprops with tracking radar, and no large and fast helicopters to transport teams of enforcement agents to landing sites once suspicious aircraft, mostly small, private executive jets, are forced to land.

This is strange and discouraging behavior from an administration which claims to be cracking down on drugs. It reflects a dramatic lack of national leadership in this area.

Declaring a war against drugs is meaningless without a commitment to do battle. To wage war against drugs we need an army to win. The United States has the resources to turn the tide. I suggest that the Air Force, Navy, Army and Marines join the Coast Guard in a combined effort to make our borders secure.

As Democrats, and as Americans we must not shrink from our responsibilities. Amending provisions of law allowing the military to be used is meaningless without employing those resources. Our fellow citizens are demanding a bold initiative to deal with this crisis. The weapons are at hand, the cause is valiant and come November 6 the day will be ours.

Thank you.●

STOP TESTING AND START TALKING

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, there is mounting evidence that our Senate colleagues are playing politics with our national security in the conference committee on the fiscal year 1985 defense authorization bill. Among the issues being dealt with in a less than straightforward manner is the question of how this country will deal with the threat of an unlimited arms race in space, and the opportunity to enhance our security by limiting Soviet military space programs.

This issue centers on the positions of the House and Senate on further testing of our ASAT system, and the potential for space arms control. I would like to enter into the RECORD of our proceedings an article by Peter F. Didisheim, a research associate for the Union of Concerned Scientists. His well-informed and reasoned analysis of this issue should be read by every Member of this body, and dare I say by the Senate defense conferees as well.

The article follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, July 29, 1984]

STOP TESTING AND START TALKING

(By Peter F. Didisheim)

An F-15 jet fighter will speed down a California runway. It will lift off and ascend rapidly. An 18-foot missile will be launched from beneath the airplane, and will accelerate upward into outer space.

A sphere six feet in diameter, launched days earlier from an island off Virginia, will serve as the orbiting target. An anti-satellite weapon—a small cylinder housed with a computer, rocket thrusters and heat-seeking telescopes—will separate from the missile and home in on the target. If the test proceeds as planned, the weapon will demolish the target by ramming through it.

If this space weapon test occurs this fall, as the Air Force hopes, the United States will jeopardize an opportunity to reach a valuable arms control agreement with the Soviet Union. A House-Senate conference committee is to decide whether these anti-statellite [ASAT] tests should proceed. The decision should be "no."

The United States' ASAT program was initiated in 1978 to help stimulate an ASAT ban with the Soviets. It was, White House officials claimed, "an important goal" to reach an ASAT accord with Moscow before space became "an arena for all-out military competition." The ASAT research and development effort was meant to "induce Moscow to agree to ban such weapons."

The Soviet Union had been testing an ASAT since 1968, and though it had not proven to be an especially threatening system because of its limited range and questionable reliability, it was still a concern to U.S. military planners. To get the Soviet Union to abandon the weapon, it was reasoned, the United States would need as ASAT program of its own to bargain away.

In 1978 and 1979, three rounds of ASAT talks were held between the U.S. and the Soviet Union. No agreement was reached, however, and with the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan further negotiations were put on hold.

It has now been more than four years since the two nations discussed the implications of an unconstrained ASAT competition, and the technology is rapidly reaching the point where both sides' vital military satellites—including those used to deter nuclear war—could become threatened. It appears, however, that ASAT talks between the superpowers may resume soon.

On June 29, the Soviet Union invited the U.S. to meet this fall in Vienna to negotiate a "complete mutual renunciation of antisatellite systems." Similar offers have been advanced by the Soviet over the last year, although this invitation was the first to specify a time and place for such talks. Most notable, however, was that the Reagan administration accepted the invitation. All previous offers had been flatly rejected.

The Soviets, obviously worried by American technical prowess, are offering to dismantle their existing ASAT, provide on-site inspection for that dismantlement and possibly allow for other cooperative means of verification. The Soviets also have refrained from testing their ASAT for more than two years, and have declared that until an agreement is reached that "liquidates" such systems, they will not test the weapon any further.

So the role originally envisioned for the U.S. ASAT has been fulfilled. The Soviets have watched our ASAT program and have decided it's better to stop the ASAT race right now. This is not to say that ASAT negotiations between the two nations will be easy, for there are many critical issues that will be difficult to resolve. A solid agreement is nonetheless within reach.

But there's a hitch. As has happened time and again when the U.S. has taken the "bargaining chip" approach to arms control, the military has fallen in love with the chip and is refusing to cash it in. We have witnessed this with the MX, cruise missiles, and now ASATS. In familiar fashion, the military rejects the notion that the weapon was intended to be bargained away, asserting instead that it now serves a vital military function. Consider, for example, testimony to Congress by one of the Pentagon's chief weapons managers, Dr. Robert S. Cooper: "Our ASAT development program, contrary to another misconception, has never been a 'bargaining chip' for arms control.

To preserve the opportunity at hand, Congress must intervene and halt the further testing of our ASAT until the Soviet proposals have been fully explored.

The House-Senate conference can do so by adopting the House amendment passed May 23, which bans tests of the U.S. ASAT in space for one year as long as the Soviets show identical restraint. It is this position, and not the Senate measure, which allows ASAT testing to proceed within the context of "good faith" efforts to negotiate, that will help move us toward a successful ASAT treaty with the Soviets.

Further tests of the U.S. weapon will not give us more leverage, but less: The F-15 ASAT is superior to the Soviet system, and its deployment will create profound verification problems. If testing of the weapon proceeds, the Soviets' likely response will be to push ahead with a new, more sophisticated system of their own. The arms control opportunity that currently exists might thereby be lost.

The cycle of weapons development must be stopped at some point, and the place to stop with ASATs is at the testing stage. A mutual moratorium on testing ASATs in space would be fully verifiable. It is consistent with the original rationale for the U.S. ASAT. It will enhance the prospects of reaching an ASAT treaty. Moreover, it represents the critical test of "good faith" as we declare to the world that we sincerely favor arms control to a mindless, never-ending arms race.●

SENATE SHOULD CONSIDER JUSTICE ASSISTANCE ACT

HON. JAMES J. HOWARD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, with all of the campaign rhetoric regarding anticrime legislation coming from the White House these days, I wonder why President Reagan has not called upon the Senate to consider legislation aimed at assisting local authorities in the battle against street crime.

At his news conference last week, President Reagan once again criticized the House of Representatives for not moving quickly enough on anticrime legislation and its appears that the President will be running on a tough anticrime agenda during this election year. However, it seems to me that if the President was really serious about enacting crime legislation, he would simply pick up the phone and call his friends in the Senate leadership and urge them to consider the Justice Assistance Act of 1983.

It is a well-known fact that the violent crimes that affect our citizens are under the jurisdiction of State and local law enforcement agencies. The only bill before the Congress that can assist the local authorities in this battle is the Justice Assistance Act. This legislation clearly says that the Federal Government should share a responsibility in protecting our citizens and establishes a modest program to assist local authorities in promoting effective anticrime programs addressing such matters as career criminals, arson, sting operations, and prison overcrowding.

Mr. Speaker, the Justice Assistance Act passed the House of Representatives over 1 year ago by an overwhelming vote of 399 to 16. There is absolutely no reason for the Senate not to act on this legislation. Enough time remains for the Senate to approve this bill and send it to conference.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I request that the President urge his allies in the Republican Senate leadership to begin consideration of this important legislation which will be a valuable tool to local authorities in the war on crime. Perhaps then he can add some substance to what up to now appears to be campaign posturing. The House of Representatives has done its job on the Justice Assistance Act of 1983. It is time that the President and the Senate do theirs.●

A TRIBUTE TO JACK J. MONTE

HON. RICHARD C. SHELBY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay special tribute to an outstanding citizen and veteran, Mr. Jack J. Monte. It is especially fitting to honor Mr. Monte given the recent celebrations commemorating the 40th anniversary of the Normandy Invasion.

Mr. Monte, who presently resides in Homewood, AL, is one of the few surviving members of the First Special Service Force. Conceived in a moment of conversation between General Marshall and Churchill at Chequers, the First Special Service was activated at Helena, MT, on July 20, 1942. The "force," as it was called by its members, was under the command of Maj. Gen. Robert Frederick of San Francisco. It was comprised of volunteers from the Canadian and American Armies and had the distinct honor of being the only unit of its kind in existence.

The First Special Service Force played a pivotal role in the allied victory. After months of training, which mostly consisted of winter and mountain warfare, the "force" received its first overseas assignment at Kiska, AK, in July of 1943 before entering the Italian campaign where they quickly earned their reputation. Though it never exceeded 1,800 men, the "force" was remembered as one of the toughest fighting outfits on Earth. It was the Germans who gave the special force the name that they are most known by today; the "Devil's Brigade." It was this name that later became the title of the motion picture which starred William Holden as General Frederick. The movie, "the Devil's Brigade," was a special tribute to the men of this courageous force and their fearless leader.

Perhaps, the best accounts of the true heroism of the "Men in Baggy Pants," as the Nazis called them because of their mountain climbing gear, are given by those who were the targets of their attack:

"By God," said a German Colonel they captured in Italy, "if they gave me a handful of soldiers like them, I'd lick the Russian Army."

The "force" had an uncanny way of mysteriously appearing where the enemies least expected, as described in a diary found on the body of a dead German lieutenant:

The black devils are all around us every time we come into the line and we never hear them.

As a member of this dauntless fighting force, Mr. Monte epitomizes the courage with which the brigade fought. He serves as a constant reminder of the freedom we hold so dear, yet which too often is taken for granted. Fortunately, there are still those such as Mr. Monte who recognize the price that must be paid for preserving our rich heritage of freedom and liberty, for in the words of President Eisenhower, "in the final choice, a soldier's pack is not so heavy a burden as a prisoner's chains."●

EQUAL ACCESS

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to congratulate the House and the Senate for finally approving legislation prohibiting a public secondary school, which receives Federal financial assistance and which allows the use of their facilities by other student-initiated extracurricular groups, from denying equal access to any students who wish to conduct a meeting on the basis of the religious, political, philosophical, or other content of the speech at such meetings. I am confident that the President will sign this legislation in the near future.

This legislation, which is known as the Equal Access Act, specifies that the meetings be voluntary and student-initiated, prohibits teachers and school administrators from participating in the meetings, and severely restricts the opportunity for nonschool persons from participating in the meetings. Also, to decrease the chances of any interruption of the instructional periods, this measure only allows the meetings to take place before or after the regular school day.

It is unfortunate that this legislation could not have been enacted sooner. For too long many of our children have unjustifiably been denied access to their school's facilities because they wished to meet and to discuss religious issues with some of their classmates. This denial has been a severe infringement upon each student's right to freedom of speech guaranteed under the 1st and 14th amendments.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am extremely pleased that Congress has finally recognized that religious speech is one that is deserving of the full protection of the Constitution.●

SYNFUEL FUNDING

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of my colleagues to the following exchange of letters between myself and Majority Leader JIM WRIGHT. They lay out the basis for a compromise on the proposed recission of synfuel funding from the Interior appropriations bill, H.R. 5973, which is due to come to the floor Thursday, August 2. I believe it safe to say that this compromise can be called a victory for all those who are concerned with the Nation's energy future and who feel the Government needs to take positive steps to improve that future.

Mr. WRIGHT has argued eloquently in favor of a continued synfuels program as being essential to the future well-being of the Nation. As he notes, however, the conduct of the synfuels program has been less than satisfactory and in need of improvement. He also notes that there is great need to continue alternate energy development programs, which are severely endangered in the current fiscal climate. He is in agreement with a proposal by Representative FUQUA, chairman of the House Science and Technology Committee, that $2 billion of the existing appropriations for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation be set aside for renewable energy development.

It seems to me that the House faces a great opportunity for preserving a comprehensive and balanced energy program. We should seize that opportunity before it is too late and the necessary funds are lost. Mr. RATCHFORD and Mr. MCDADE will propose a $5 billion recission from $13 billion already appropriated for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation when the Interior appropriations bill comes to the floor. We should accept that recission. Then we should set aside another $2 billion for the purposes set forth in the Fuqua amendment to the DOE authorization bill when it comes to the floor as soon as next week. As Mr. WRIGHT notes:

It is my earnest belief that we would commit a grave folly, one which all of us would live to regret, if in our displeasure over the management of this agency, we were to destroy the remaining mechanism by which our goals can be achieved with an intelligent redirection of effort.

The letters follow:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 31, 1984.

Hon. JIM WRIGHT,
Majority Leader, The Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM: I appreciated the opportunity to speak with you about the need to continue funding for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and I reiterate my support for your efforts to maintain sufficient funding for the SFC.

The vote of our colleagues on the rule to the Interior Appropriations bill clearly indicates, however, that the judgment of a majority in the House may well be to rescind a portion of the funds currently available to the SFC. During last Wednesday's debate on the rule, Congressman Fuqua, Chairman of the Science and Technology Committee, indicated his desire to offer an amendment to appropriate legislation which would create and "Energy Research and Development Facilities Reserve" in the Department of the Treasury to be funded with $2 billion of appropriations now available to the SFC. Chairman Fuqua indicated that hearings before his committee have led him to the conclusion that government support is needed to advance certain energy technologies from the proof of concept stage to the marketplace.

The concept forwarded by Mr. Fuqua and others makes sense. I think that a number of our colleagues are now persuaded that there is a need to fund, with private industry participation, a number of near-commercial-scale energy projects. This support can and should be applied to all types of energy resources, both fossil based and renewables. It is clear to the members of the Energy and Water Appropriations Subcommittee that there is a powerful need to crystalize the results of hundreds of millions of tax dollars invested in solar and renewable energy resources thus far. Between 1975 and 1984, for instance, we have spent $737 million on photovoltaics, $742 million on solar thermal, $350 million on wind energy and $261 million on biomass. For all renewable technologies we have spent $3.1 billion from 1975 through this fiscal 1984. Similar sums have been devoted to our nation's conservation effort. Similar great benefits are in store for us if we stay that particular course.

Mr. Fuqua's proposal is to maintain a national energy policy, one that is coherent and diversified. It is aimed at developing those alternatives which are best for our environment, our economy, and our energy independence. You have spoken of the need for such a policy many times, and you are speaking in those terms as you support the continued efforts of the SFC.

Therefore, as you lead the debate to preserve funding for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, I would be happy to work with you and others in attempting to form a coalition, dedicated to structuring an acceptable program to use a portion of the available SFC funds for creation of a reserve for nonnuclear energy technology development at near-commercial-scale, as has been suggested by Chairman Fuqua. I think that this approach is far preferable to rescinding funds outright. An outright rescission of $10 billion is not in the best interest, either short-term or long-term, of this country. You may be assured of my continuing support for your efforts in this important matter.

Sincerely,

VIC FAZIO,
Member of Congress.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
OFFICE OF THE MAJORITY LEADER,
Washington, DC, August 1, 1984.

Hon. VIC FAZIO,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR VIC: Thank you very much for your letter of yesterday. You are absolutely right. The Synthetic Fuels Corporation was mandated by Congress to develop a broad range of alternate energy sources. Its range of activities should not be confined to fossil fuels by any manner of means. Most certainly we need to develop every source of potential energy in the broadest possible assault upon our continued vulnerability to foreign oil. In addition to fossil fuels, there is great potential in solar energy, photovoltaics, thermal energy and the use of waste products from our farms, fields and forests to make methanol and ethanol as at least partial replacements for gasoline.

Additional research and application into new and innovative conservation methods and techniques also must be emphasized if we are to achieve our goal of energy independence. The program of assistance for homeowners and owners of small businesses to weatherize and insulate buildings throughout America has done enormous good already. Industrial cogeneration holds out a distinct promise for additional means of energy conservation.

All of these efforts must go forward. Tragically, we have lost momentum in the severe budget cuts which most of these programs have suffered during the past three years. We have not been filling the domestic petroleum reserves as readily as Congress mandated.

Another problem looms on the horizon. The soaring deficits have cast a shadow over the continuation of energy tax credits, the existence of which you and I both actively support.

Under these circumstances, it is absolutely imperative that we keep alive whatever mechanisms that exist for the development and conservation of energy in every form that is possible. The Synthetic Fuels Corporation, misused though it undoubtedly has been, remains a viable potential tool to achieve alternate energy sources not confined to fossil fuels. It is my earnest belief that we would commit a grave folly, one which all of us would live to regret, if in our displeasure over the mismanagement of this agency, we were to destroy the remaining mechanism by which our goals can be achieved with an intelligent redirection of effort.

Just such an opportunity to broaden the scope of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation will occur within the next few days when we consider the Department of Energy Civilian Research and Development Authorization Act (H.R. 5244) which has been reported by the Committee on Science and Technology. It would be a pity if we had destroyed the vehicle on the very eve of our opportunity to reform it.

For all of these reasons, I feel that the goal of national energy self-sufficiency requires us to keep this program alive long enough to redirect its thrust.

Very sincerely yours,

JIM WRIGHT.●

NATIONAL DRUG ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS WEEK

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, on June 7, 1984, the distinguished chairman of our Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, The gentleman from New York, Mr. RANGEL and I, as ranking minority member of the Select Committee, introduced House Joint Resolution 588, designating the week of October 7-13, 1984, as "National Drug Enforcement Officers Week." Such an observance would serve as a fitting tribute to the outstanding work and dedicated efforts of the International Drug Enforcement Officers Association [INEOA] and all narcotic enforcement officers who daily confront the ever growing human tragedy of narcotics trafficking. It is a war of huge political, economic, social ramifications, and it is the commitment of our enforcement officers that helps us to turn the tide on this deadly menace.

The International Narcotic Enforcement Officers Association, which consists of 7,500 law enforcement officers from all levels of government throughout the Nation and throughout the world, was founded 25 years ago in Albany, NY. The INEOA is returning to that city during the week of October 7, 1984, to celebrate its 25th Annual International Conference. For a group that does so much for society, they certainly deserve the recognition that this resolution would provide. The silver anniversary of this outstanding organization affords an opportune moment for the people of the United States to recognize and to pay tribute to the determination and the commitment of these courageous officers.

Mr. Speaker, at this time, I invite and urge all of my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this resolution. With our collective voices we can help demonstrate the Nation's appreciation for the efforts of the INEOA and its deep commitment to combating narcotics trafficking and drug abuse.

Mr. Speaker at this point in the RECORD, I request that there be inserted a complete list of our colleagues who to date have joined us in this effort:

LIST OF COSPONSORS

Mr. Akaka, Mr. Badham, Mr. Bateman, Mr. Borski, Mr. Bryant, Mr. Chappie, Mr. Clinger, Mr. Coughlin, Mr. Daub, Mr. Dowdy, Mr. Edgar, Mr. Fascell, Mr. Fauntroy, Mr. Frenzel, Mr. Fuqua, Mr. Green, Mr. Guarini, Mr. Heftel, Mr. Hunter, and Mr. Lagomarsino.

Mr. Lantos, Mr. Lewis (FL), Mr. McGrath, Mr. McHugh, Mr. Martinez, Mr. Matsui, Mr. Neal, Mr. Ortiz, Mr. Owens, Mr. Oxley, Mr. Pritchard, Mr. Ratchford, Mr. Richardson, Mr. Rodino, Mr. Roe, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Smith (FL), Mr. Stark, Mr. Stokes, Mr. Stratton, Mr. Towns, Mr. Waxman, and Mr. Wortley.●

DEFICITS AND INTEREST RATES

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, August 1, 1984, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

DEFICITS AND INTEREST RATES

Just before the July recess, Congress completed action on the deficit reduction package. While further modest cuts may be made in defense spending, little more progress on deficit reduction can be expected this year. So it is time to look ahead to 1985, to ask how far we have come, and how far we have yet to go.

The quick answer is that steps taken to date are not nearly enough to get the deficits under control, and the tough decisions lie ahead. The package only inches us toward our goal of balancing revenue and expenditures. The big tax increase and spending cut that President Reagan signed into law in July will reduce the average annual deficit from now through 1987 by less than one tenth. In the next two years it will not mean lower deficits because its savings will be eaten up by rising interest costs. The deficit "down payment" will boost taxes an estimated $10.6 billion the next year, while cutting spending about $4 billion each year. But with interest rates climbing, as most experts predict, the government's $110 billion net interest bill could easily increase by $25 or $35 billion. That means the deficit reduction package will not offset the higher interest bills for the next 2 years. Without the package, of course, the deficit would be even higher. So the prospect is that, even with the deficit reduction package, deficits will still equal nearly five percent of our gross national product, and will still be the largest peacetime deficits we have ever experienced.

One frustrating aspect of the effort to reduce the deficit is that the surge in the interest the government pays on the national debt is now outstripping the growth rate for defense spending, and offsetting spending cuts and tax increases. Sustained high interest rates have become a principal cause of the huge budget deficits. Like any over-extended borrower, the U.S. government is scrambling just to keep up with rising finance charges.

A simplified example illustrates the problem: if the government borrows to cover the $200 billion deficit, then, with interest rates at 10%, the government has to pay $20 billion annually to service the additional debt. After 2 years $400 billion has been added to the debt, requiring $40 billion in annual additional interest payments. In 3 years, it's $600 billion and $60 billion—even without the compounding.

The annual debt service bill is now growing at a rate of $1 to $2 billion per month. The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office projects that under current law, debt service costs will double by 1989 to $219 billion. As the current $1.3 trillion federal debt rockets upward, the growth in the interest bill becomes explosive. If current trends continue, the U.S. will have to increase taxes or cut spending every year, not to pay for more defense or new programs, but just to pay interest on the debt. These interest rates are an important reason why the budget deficit should be reduced quickly.

The soaring interest charges are also frustrating because they make the budget even more intractable than it already is, and because they put a large and rising portion of federal spending beyond control, and prevent any new initiatives in the 1980s. The danger is that this debt service burden is so crushing that it will force the government toward the inflationary solution of printing money. If these trends continue, the economy will not generate the real income to make payments on the debt, and living standards will decline. Another danger is that growth in debt service costs could overwhelm the government's political will to cut spending or raise taxes.

Moreover, because foreigners attracted by high U.S. interest rates have invested heavily in U.S. securities, a large portion of the interest payments will flow into foreign bank accounts rather than into American investments.

Interest payments are an unseen but vital ingredient in the effort to reduce the deficit. If we succeed in getting the deficit down, then monetary policy can ease, and the combination of a smaller national debt and lower interest rates will bring net interest spending down. If we fail, then higher rates on a larger debt will keep this component of our deficit spiralling upward.

Strangely enough, the deficits so far have not done too much damage. Thus far in 1984 the nation's economy has grown faster and with less inflation than it has for two decades. The reasons for this are only partly understood. The federal deficits have stimulated the economy more than expected. The recession was unusually harsh, and the consumer is engaging in a post recession spending boom. Demographics are helping the boom, too. Children born after World War II are now in the expensive stage of buying homes, appliances, and cars. To a remarkable degree consumers have adapted to high interest rates. As to inflation, an open U.S. economy has encouraged foreign imports which have helped keep prices down. Wage increases have moderated, and the strong dollar has made imports cheaper and discouraged American competitors from raising prices. The deficits have not yet done much damage because they represent a use by the government of resources—capital, labor, materials—which were not being taken up in the private economy. But, with the recession ended that is changing. What economists call a "cyclical deficit"—the natural consequence of an underemployed economy—is giving way to a dangerous "structural deficit" of unprecedented proportions.

It is my judgement that the highest order of business for the newly elected President and Congress in 1985 will be to push hard for a meaningful deficit reduction package. The stakes are high for all of us. Timely deficit reduction can bring us sustained growth, higher rates of saving and investment, a more competitive economy, and full employment with a low risk of renewed inflation. Failure to reduce the deficits is likely to send the economy into another inflationary orbit, followed by another recession, higher unemployment, and further wrenching strains on the factories, farms, and people of our nation.●

DELLA ZAHER: OUTSTANDING ELEMENTARY SCHOOL PRINCIPAL

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, only through a well-educated public will we be able to achieve a more productive society. As a former teacher and chairman of the Dade County School Board, I understand the importance of strong leadership in our schools.

It is for this reason that I would like to acknowledge the outstanding performance of Della Zaher, principal of Miami Shores Elementary School. Our three children attended Miami Shores Elementary—a family tradition—and I have visited there many times.

My own philosophy and experience is that the ability and example of the school principal makes the difference in the quality and excellence of a school. Under strong leadership our public schools are, and will be, alive and well.

An article recently published in the Miami Herald underscores the value of strong principal leadership. Della Zaher is named as one of the outstanding grade school principals in the country by the National Association of Elementary School Principals. I wanted to share this article with my colleagues.

PRINCIPAL MAKES THE GRADE NATIONALLY

(By John Arnold)

When she stepped down from her pickup truck in the parking lot of Miami Shores Elementary, her first thoughts were about what a pretty old school it was.

She stood in the middle of the old patio and looked at the trees and flowers and shrubs that surrounded the gray stone with color and cool shade.

And she thought, "What a big job I've got."

When Della Zaher took over as principal of the school last year, the 55-year-old landmark elementary was embroiled in turmoil despite its serene setting.

The old school was overcrowded and drew a high proportion of minority students in an area that included the predominantly white city of Miami Shores.

Parents were pulling their children out, and neighbors were complaining that unruly youngsters trampled their yards and littered sidewalks after class with their school papers.

Della Zaher, a veteran Dade principal, thought she had to turn her Miami Shores around. She set out to talk parents of private school students into bringing their children back to the venerable grade school. She praised the virtues of public education to any civic group or church that would listen. She worked six days a week, 12 hours a day.

It's been a year now, and neighbors no longer complain about young pupils littering lawns. The school has regained 172 students from private schools, the best record in the county.

Her best students get to study everything from the stock market to Shakespeare. And the lucky few with grades good enough for the principal's honor roll get a ride to lunch in her pickup truck, a shiny brown Chevy with a chrome roll bar and chome cutout exhausts.

A lot of people think Miami Shores is a different school now, and Della Zaher has been named one of the outstanding grade school principals in the country by the National Association of Elementary School Principals. She will be Florida's lone representative honored along with winners from each of the other states and several foreign nations at a White House reception in October.

Says Cindy Lauri, past president of the Miami Shores PTA, "I think there's been a definite change. People who had kind of given up on the public school system are thrilled about what's happened over there. It's great to hear people talking so positively about the school.

"She has set a tone over there of very high standards and of refusing to settle for mediocre work from the kids," said Lauri, mother of two boys, one a fifth grader at the school.

"We've come a long way," Zaher said. "The children are really looking at the school as something they can be proud of."

Here philosophy of education is simple. "I think you get what you expect," she said.

She has set the standards high, and the youngsters who perform well are rewarded.

If you expect excellence, you get it, she says.

"And I think every child should enjoy their years in school as much as I did."

She grew up in a neighborhood not too far from Miami Shores and went to Little River Elementary School.

She got her first teaching job in Dade County at age 23 at the same school, Little River Elementary. And many of her teaching colleagues there had taught her how to read and write when she was a little girl.

She had been voted most likely to succeed in her senior class at Edison High School.

At age 52, she has been a teacher, an administrator and an elementary school principal in Dade County schools for 28 years.

"I guess success is what you think it is," she says. "I guess I've never really left home."

"There are a lot of outstanding principals out there, and I'm very honored by this award."●

NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION ACT OF 1984

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3987, the National Archives and Records Administration Act of 1984, which would create a new National Archives and Records Administration as an independent agency. The bill would restore the U.S. Archives to the status it held from its founding in 1934 until it was incorporated into the General Services Administration in 1949.

My district is the site of the Dayton Federal Records Center, a division of the National Archives and Records Service, which is one of 15 regional depositories of noncurrent Federal records. This facility, located in Moraine, OH, stores 750,000 cubic feet of records, and processes over 1.5 million reference requests every year.

The Dayton Center is responsible for maintaining documents from Federal agencies located in Ohio, Indiania, and Michigan. These are primarily tax returns filed with the Internal Revenue Service and records from the Army, Navy, Veteran's Administration, and Social Security Administration.

The establishment of an independent National Archives and Records Administration will improve efficiency within the Archives and give the depositories of Federal documents greater authority to deal with their unique problems.

The Dayton Federal Records Center and other branches of the Archives provide the American people with a valuable service by storing, preserving, and making available important documents produced by the various agencies within the Federal Government. The National Archives and Records Administration Act of 1984 is a simple way to enhance that service with no additional expense.●

WELCOME TO OUR BELGIAN STUDENTS

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome the students from L'Institut Provincal de L'Enseignement Secondaire de Waremme, Belgium to my Fifth District in Maryland.

The students and their teacher, Mr. Albert Uurlings, are visiting our country as part of an annual interscholastic foreign exchange program with the students from Northwestern High School in Hyattsville, MD.

These two groups have been fostering international understanding and cultural awareness between Waremme, Belgium, and Hayattsville, MD, for the past 5 years. Just last year students from Northwestern were guest of the country of Belgium.

This exchange program provides these high school students with the opportunity to enjoy the experiences of each other's countries; but perhaps more importantly, it enables long-lasting friendships to develop and enhances our future relationships with foreign countries.

With their visit here to Washington, they have opportunity to witness firsthand the working of our great democracy. Their visits to the House of Representatives, the White House and the Supreme Court allow them to understand how our three branches of Government operate and complement each other. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this goodwill effort and the efforts of the American teachers from Northwestern, Ms. Barbara Fretz and Mr. John D'Estachio, and hope my colleagues will join in welcoming these fine young Belgian students to our Nation's Capitol.●

ROBERT W. DUFF: CONTRIBUTING TO THE HOMEBUILDING INDUSTRY FOR OVER A QUARTER OF A CENTURY

HON. JERRY M. PATTERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in recognition of the outstanding contributions of Robert W. Duff to the homebuilding industry.

Robert Duff, vice president in charge of National Subdivision and Land Development for First American Title Insurance Co., Santa Ana, CA, is frequently called upon to discuss the intricacies of land development.

He is well versed in the complexities of condominiums, including the FHA/VA and HUD programs, planned unit developments, zero side yard concepts, community projects, common interest subdivisions, time-sharing, interval land ownership, leaseholds and other phases of the constantly changing construction industry.

Mr. Duff has lectured on the compliicated area of community concepts at UCLA and University of California, Irvine under the Professional Practices in Home Building course.

A 29-year veteran of the title insurance business and related fields, Bob supervises all phases of map recording, land development, and common interest subdivision title insurance coverage throughout First American's 50-State system.

During his years of service with First American, he has conducted tax and bond surveys and directed the building of tax and bond plants for offices of the company in several California counties. He was associated with the Tax Service of Orange County, Inc., before joining the First American staff on a full-time basis in 1956.

Mr. Duff is a past director and first vice president of the Home Builders Council of California. At present, he serves on the Board of Directors of the Orange County Chapter of the Building Industry Association of Southern California, is a director from industry on the Board of Directors of the State Building Industry Association of Southern California, and is on the executive committee of the Political Action Committee for the Building Industry Association of Southern California. Also, Mr. Duff is the liaison officer for the Building Industry Association—Political Action Committee between the Orange County Chapter and the Building Industry Association—Political Action Committee at the State level. He serves the National Association of Home Builders, Washington, DC, through a Presidential appointment as associates director, representing all associate members at national level for the State of California.

Among the many awards he holds is a lifetime membership in the exclusive Spike-Karet Club which is sanctioned by the National Association of Home Builders, Washington, DC, the 1982 Building Industry Association Southern California Past Presidents Award, and the Building Industry Associate of the Year award.

Bob Duff is the author of several pamphlets covering the complicated areas of condominiums, apartment conversions, time sharing, and other related fields.●

PEACE ACTIVISTS AND HELSINKI: A RECIPROCAL RELATIONSHIP

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, today, as we mark the ninth anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords, it is important for us to take a few moments to step back and reflect upon Helsinki and the role of the individual in its implementation.

One of the most significant commitments contained in the Helsinki accords is to uphold and protect human rights. The 35 Helskinki signatory nations recognized that respect for human rights is an essential ingredient in the establishment of genuine peace and security among nations. A group of private citizens in the Soviet Union, seeking the implementation of promises that the Soviet Union acceded to freely and the establishment of lasting peace between the two great superpowers, was formed 2 years ago. Yet, for some reason, this small group of concerned citizens, in search of international peace, has encountered the scorn of their Government. The group to establish trust between the U.S. and U.S.S.R. came into being when 15 Soviets decided in June 1982 to launch a campaign promoting a four-sided dialog between the governments and peoples of the U.S. and U.S.S.R. The Soviet Union's wrongful treatment of its citizenry is epitomized by the harassment of these independent peace activists in that country.

Spurred to action by the looming consequences of the spiraling arms race and compelled by the horrors of nuclear war, the group for trust is guided by the realization that genuine peace can only come through discussion and negotiation. Subsequently, they believe that the success of any effort to normalize the international situation is dependent upon the determination of each side to demonstrate their confidence through negotiation. Thus, the group for trust insists that the best way to overcome the existing obstacles barring discussion is for each side to display their good faith through the realization of promises already made, such as those agreed to in Helsinki.

While endorsing an end to the arms race and the use of force in international relations, much of the group's activity has centered on nonmilitary initiatives. Seeking to lessen international tensions through familiarity, the group for trust calls for increased personal contacts across borders and the development of friendship and mutual understanding between average citizens of the U.S. and U.S.S.R. They maintain that such understanding would facilitate détente and the attainment of a more cooperative and productive relationship between East and West.

Despite the confluence of language and purpose between the Helsinki accords and the peace activists' statements, the Soviet Union has defied its Helsinki pledges and has engaged in systematic intimidation of those who wish to see these rights upheld.

Members of the group for trust have come under attack from the Soviet Government. Some have received threats, others have been subjected to searches of their homes. In an attempt to create a vacuum around the peace activists, the Soviet Government harasses even those who associate with group members. In just the past 2 years, group members Vladimir Kornev, Vera Kornev, Vladimir Mischenko, and Aleksandr Shatravka were arrested on flimsy charges and sentenced to labor camps for no less than 1 year. A fellow member, Oleg Radzinsky, was arrested on similar charges and subjected to psychiatric examinations. Mr. Radzinsky was sentenced to 1 year in camp plus 5 years of internal exile.

This defamation of the values central to the Helsinki accords is certainly not heartening. Such actions hardly encourage the international community to look upon the Soviets as credible negotiators or as genuine peace seekers. However, the ideals of Helsinki live on the U.S.S.R., whether or not the Government chooses to make good on its promises, because of activities such as those of the group for trust.●

NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF HELSINKI ACCORDS

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, today marks the ninth anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act by the heads of state of 33 European nations, the United States, and Canada. The Final Act, with its promise to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, ignited a spark of hope among those whose rights had been trampled upon for so long.

Today, Mr. Speaker, should be a day of celebration. We should, after 9 years, be seeing the fruits of the labor of those who toiled to produce this blueprint for the achievement of real security and cooperation in Europe. Sadly, this is not the case. A look at the compliance record of certain signatories, particularly in the last few years, does not strengthen the cause of hope. The total contempt with which the Soviet Government has regarded the provisions of the Final Act produce a sense of deep frustration among those who believe that stated commitments should be taken seriously. The Soviet Union's violations of this agreement have become so extensive and so pervasive that to document them all here would take far too long. Indeed, the Helsinki Commission, on which I serve, has throughout the last 7 years issued numerous reports which illustrate both the depth and breadth of the Soviet Government's arrogant disregard for both the letter and spirit of the Helsinki Final Act.

Tragically, in the last year, as if to further mock the Final Act, the Soviet Government has violated its provisions with even greater impunity. The Soviets have continued to arrest and persecute religious and national rights activists. Last March, they sentenced Valeriy Marchenko, a Ukrainian human rights activist and former political prisoner to the draconian term of 10 years labor camp and 5 years internal exile. Given the precarious state of his health, it is not an exaggeration to say that Marchenko's life is threatened by the brutal conditions of the labor camp. In early May, Oleksiy Tykhy, cofounder of the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group, died in a Perm labor camp following an operation. The 57-year-old Tykhy was suffering from severe malnutrition as a result of long untreated stomach ulcers. Mr. Tykhy, a teacher by profession, had signed Ukrainian Helsinki Group documents detailing the poor human rights situation in Ukraine and calling upon the Soviet Government to take seriously its commitments under the Helsinki Final Act. His noble efforts resulted in a lengthy prison sentence which surely hastened his death.

In the Baltic States, the persecution of activists continues as well. Last December, as part of a massive crackdown on Latvian dissidents, two young Baptists, Janis Rozkalns and Janis Veveris, and two veteran advocates of human and national rights, Guners Astra and Gunars Freimanis, were tried and convicted of anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda. In Lithuania, two Catholic priests, Father Alfonsas Svarinskas and Father Sigitas Tamkevicius, were given harsh sentences for their efforts in defense of the rights of Lithuanian Catholics. In Eastonia, prominent human and national rights campaigners Laglo Parek, Heiki Ahonen, and Arvo Pesti were sentenced within the last year for signing various protest documents. These, Mr. Speaker, represent only part of the Soviet violations of the Final Act which include, inter alia, the continuing brutal occupation of Afghanistan, the virtual cessation of emigration, the unrelenting assault on Soviet Jews, and the arrogant mistreatment of the Sakharovs.

Mr. Speaker, despite the Soviet Government's flagrant abuses, we cannot give up on the Helsinki process. Those who languish in prisons, labor camps and psychiatric hopsitals for their courageous adherence to the noble ideals represented in the Final Act serve as an inspiration to all of us. We must remain steadfast in our belief in the efficacy of the Final Act, and persistently condemn the Soviets for their abuses of it. We must take advantage of every opportunity afforded to us in the Helsinki process to take the Soviets to task for their failure to abide by their commitments. To not do so would be to betray the trust of millions in the Soviet Union who hope for a more humane and just society.●

PLUTONIUM SHIPMENT TO JAPAN

HON. MICHAEL D. BARNES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, the administration has approved the transfer of 253 kilograms of separated plutonium from France to Japan. This would be the first shipment of separated, weapons-usable plutonium approved by the United States for transfer outside of Europe since enactment of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978. Several days ago, the Washington Post carried an editorial on the shipment, which I highly recommend to my colleagues:

[From the Washington Post, July 30, 1984]

HAZARDOUS CARGO

Moving a quarter of a ton of plutonium from Europe to Japan is not a simple matter. Nor is it reassuring to see this material in wider world commerce. The cost of carelessness in handling it would be spectacularly high.

This plutonium has been derived from uranium fuel rods originally supplied by the United States to Japan for use in Japanese power reactors generating electricity. The Japanese sent the spent fuel off to France for reprocessing there, and, because it originated in this country, the U.S. government must approve its return to Japan. Reprocessing recovers the plutonium—to be used, as the Japanese intend, to run a breeder reactor. Or it could also be used to make nuclear weapons.

There are a lot of people who would like to get their hands on this shipment for reasons that do not promise long life and good health to their neighbors. The question is how to deliver it safely. The most secure way would be a nonstop air flight. But the Japanese refuse to permit a landing unless the plutonium is in a crashproof container, and crashproof containers for shipments of this magnitude do not exist. The Japanese suggested, instead, a sea voyage through the Suez Canal to the Pacific. That would have taken the ship through seas bordered by Libya, Iran and Pakistan, to mention several countries that come to mind in connection with attempts to obtain nuclear weapons.

The United States thought poorly of that idea, and negotiations followed. An agreement has been worked out under which the ship will be continually monitored and, in certain areas, escorted by naval forces to minimize, as the administration delicately puts it, response times in an emergency. The administration is entitled to credit for taking the physical hazards of this journey as seriously as they deserve.

Japan, like France, is working on breeder reactors because both countries have few indigenous sources of energy and have learned to fear total dependence on imported fuel. But both the breeder and reprocessing are proving to be difficult technologies and, in economic terms, extremely expensive.

There's a better alternative—safer in every respect. It's an American guarantee to supply its friends, unconditionally, with low-enriched uranium. It's fine for running power reactors, and it's not explosive. The United States has the capacity to provide that guarantee. The other route, using plutonium, ominously links the civilian economy with the manufacture of nuclear weapons.●

STEVE SOLARZ ON AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY: THE WAY IT OUGHT TO BE

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, on July 17, during the proceedings of the Democratic National Convention, our colleague, Representative STEVE SOLARZ, was asked to make an address detailing the view of the Democratic Party on the many challenges facing our country in the area of foreign policy.

STEVE was scheduled to speak at 10:15 p.m., eastern daylight time. Due to the inevitable delays in the schedule, he was not actually able to begin speaking until well after 1 a.m. In the same dogged and committed manner with which STEVE approaches his duties here in Washington, Congressman SOLARZ rose to the occasion and delivered an effective analysis of the pressing foreign policy issues confronting our land, and he proposed realistic and effective solutions for dealing with them. The lateness of the hour during which he spoke in no way diminished the power and sensibility of his message.

I am confident that if STEVE's recommendations were adopted—dealing with the Middle East, the conflict in Central America, apartheid in South Africa, the developing world, and the peril we are facing from the nuclear threat—respect for our Nation internationally would grow, the world would be a safer place, and our national security would be enhanced.

The text of Congressman STEVE SOLARZ's address is printed below. I urge my colleagues to read a statement on American foreign policy—the way it ought to be.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN STEPHEN J. SOLARZ BEFORE THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION

At this late stage of the proceedings, 1:15 in the morning eastern daylight time, as I look out at the vast and virtually empty Chamber before me, I'm reminded of the story which is told about the candidate for Congress, who showed up at a candidates' forum in his district, and was told that he was scheduled to be the 29th of 30 speakers on that evening.

As the evening wore on, and speaker after speaker droned on, more and more people got up and left the auditorium. Finally, by the time the candidate for Congress was called upon to speak, there was only one person left in the entire hall, who was sitting in the first row.

The candidate began his remarks by addressing the question to the one person who remained: "Just out of curiosity," he said, "I'm wondering if you could tell me why, after everybody else has already left, you've decided to remain."

"Hell," replied the person in the first row, "I'm the next speaker."

I suppose I can be described as the next speaker. But since the show must go on, let me begin by saying that:

In his 1980 debate with President Carter, Ronald Reagan asked the American people an important question: "Are you better off than you were four years ago?"

In 1984, the American people are asking a similar question: Is the world safer, and our country more secure, than it was four years ago?

The answer is an emphatic no.

In almost every corner of the globe, four years of Republican foreign policy have made the world a more dangerous place in which to live.

In Central America, where the administration has sought military solutions to what are essentially political problems, its policies are leading us inevitably toward the introduction of American combat forces.

In the Middle East, the collapse of our policy in Lebanon and the failure of the administration to keep the peace process going, has led to a situation where the clock has begun ticking on another Arab-Israeli war, which could all too easily escalate into a superpower confrontation.

In Africa, by pandering to the racist regime in Pretoria, the administration has turned a deaf ear to the cries of 20 million black South Africans, who are denied their most basic human rights, and has thus alienated virtually all of black Africa.

In Asia, we have compromised our interest in a cooperative relationship with the peoples of the region, by appearing to embrace repressive regimes in the Philippines, South Korea, and Pakistan.

In Europe, the very foundations of the NATO alliance have been shaken by the administration's inflammatory, anti-Soviet rhetoric, and by its apparently greater interest in acquiring a nuclear war fighting capability than in negotiating mutually beneficial arms control agreements.

Most disturbing of all, our relationship with the Soviet Union, upon which the future of our country and the world ultimately depends, has dangerously deteriorated.

The foreign policy of a Democratic administration will be based on an understanding of the real world, not on the fantasies of the Reagan administration.

It will resist the Soviet challenge, but it will not wrongly assume, as the Reagan administration does, that every problem—from South Africa to El Salvador—is made in Moscow.

A Democratic foreign policy will promote the cause of human rights.

But unlike the Reagan administration, which regularly denounces the suppression of human rights by Communist countries, but remains silent in the face of human rights' violations by anti-Communist countries, a Democratic administration will oppose tyranny wherever it is found.

We will speak up on behalf of Andrei Sakharov in the Soviet Union, but we will also call for the release of Nelson Mandela in South Africa.

We will oppose martial law in Poland, but we will also condemn repression in the Philippines.

We will denounce terrorism by Communist countries like Bulgaria, that apparently tried to kill the Pope, but we will also condemn terrorism by facist countries like Chile, that committed murder in the streets of our Nations Capitol.

A Democratic administration will do everything it can to preserve the peace and resolve problems through negotiations. But if force must be used, it will only be used as a last resort, rather than a first option, as it has by the Reagan administration.

In Central America, a Democratic administration will work with our Democratic friends to resolve the conflicts in the region by peaceful rather than by military means.

It will support the Contadora process, which is the last best hope for peace in the region, by deeds and not just by words.

To demonstrate that commitment, and to reduce tensions in the area, a Democratic administration will end our covert effort to overthrow the government of Nicaragua.

But a Democratic administration will not ignore the betrayal by the Sandinistas of the Democratic promises of the Nicaraguan revolution.

It will encourage the Nicaraguan government, as we do others, to permit genuine democracy by talking to their opposition, not fighting them, and by permitting all Nicaraguans to participate in genuinely free elections.

In El Salvador, a Democratic administration will attempt to strengthen the hand of President Jose Napolean Duarte, by strictly conditioning any additional military aid on the elimination of the death squads that have been responsible for the murder of tens of thousands of innocent civilians, and on a willingness by the government of El Salvador to enter into a dialogue with the opposition in an effort to end the war through a political settlement of the conflict. We know the American people don't want any more Cubas. But we also know they don't want any more Vietnams. And we intend to make sure they don't get them.

In the Middle East, a Democratic administration will make it clear, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that we consider Israel our closest friend in the region, sharing as no other country in the area does, our own deeply rooted commitment to democracy.

We will also make the reinvigoration of the Camp David process, the one real breakthrough for peace in 35 years of unrelenting conflict and confrontation, our major diplomatic priority.

In Asia, where the Reagan Administration has embraced dictators from Seoul to Manila, a Democratic administration will call for the restoration of democracy in the Philippines, the elimination of martial law on Taiwan, and a return to freedom of speech and the press in South Korea.

It will also reaffirm our sympathy and support for the heroic efforts of the Afghan freedom fighters to secure the withdrawal of Soviet forces from their country.

In Africa, a Democratic administration will reject President Reagan's rapproachment with racism by making it unmistakably clear that we are opposed to the apartheid system in South Africa and everything it stands for.

The choice that confronts us in South Africa is not, as the administration has said, between black and white.

It is a choice between justice and injustice, between right and wrong, between decency and indecency—and we will repudiate racism in South Africa through the establishment of effective sanctions until such time as apartheid is abolished.

More importantly, a Democratic administration will give the highest priority to repairing our relationship with the Soviet Union. But at the same time that we attempt to reduce tensions with the Soviet Union, we will also use our influence to promote the cause of human rights in the Soviet Union and particularly the right of Soviet Jews, and other oppressed minorities, to emigrate.

Fellow Democrats, this is a foreign policy for the future of America.

It is a foreign policy that will protect our interests and promote our values.

It is a foreign policy of which all Americans will be proud.●

PRIDE IN THE BRONX

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, in recent years the Bronx has been working diligently to rebuild itself. Now there are positive results seen throughout the Bronx. Much of the credit for its revitalization should be given to its residents, for they make up its heart and soul. I received a letter from Mrs. Ruth Honerkamp, a longtime resident of the Bronx. Mrs. Honerkamp's letter confirms that there has been a positive change in the Bronx, and I would like to thank her for her commitment to the community. I would also like to share her letter with my colleagues.

Hon. ROBERT GARCIA.

DEAR SIR: This is in reference to your letter to the editor of the New York Times concerning the South Bronx.

My husband's company, F.W. Honerkamp, Inc. has been in the Bronx since 1946. His company is 112 years old and moved to 940 Bryant Avenue in 1946 after leaving Manhattan at 200 Lewis Street to make way for low cost housing. Last year he sold the building to a customer and is now leasing a building from the city at 500 Oak Point Avenue. This business was started by his grandfather, then continued by his father, now my husband, two sons, and my 5 grandsons who may someday follow along.

I just thought you should know the South Bronx is alive and well despite no handouts from (presidential) campaign promises.

Sincerely,

RUTH HONERKAMP (MRS. FRANK W.).

P.S. If you ever need plywood you know where to go now!

PRESIDENT'S APPOINTMENT OF ANNE M. BURFORD

HON. DANIEL K. AKAKA

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, by a vote of 363 to 51, this body passed a resolution asking President Reagan to withdraw the appointment of former EPA Administrator Anne M. Burford from the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere [NACOA]. As you know, the other body has passed a similar resolution. President Reagan, showing his usual concern for the environment, has announced that he will ignore both of these resolutions—an action that was to be expected.

It further appears that the President has gone on record and stated that he would like to abolish this advisory committee altogether. Mr. Speaker, that would be an act which I would find simply unacceptable. NACOA was created by Public Law 92-125 on August 16, 1971. This advisory committee is mandated by law to advise the President and the Congress on matters relating to oceans and the atmosphere. This 18-member committee has a very important job to do; the fact that the Reagan administration has made a political joke of NACOA is utterly inappropriate—and verges on the intolerable.

I would like to remind my colleagues that our planet, the Earth, hangs suspended in the dark void of space. As far as we know, Earth is the only planet in our solar system capable of sustaining advanced life forms. We survive on Earth because of the envelope in which our planet hangs suspended, and this envelope is called the atmosphere. Our lives all depend on what we do to the atmosphere . . . and you can be sure that, should we destroy the atmosphere with chemicals—and should we make the oceans uninhabitable—surely, life on our planet will perish.

For Ms. Burford to call NACOA a "nothingburger" is dull-witted and mildly offensive. For President Reagan to threaten to abolish NACOA altogether is simply unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to make it quite clear to this administration that we will not tolerate continued neglect of issues and policies relating to the oceans and to the atmosphere.●

HELSINKI HUMAN RIGHTS DAY

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, on August 1, 1975, representatives from 35 countries joined together in signing the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. This agreement, often referred to as the Helsinki accords, covers every aspect of East-West relations, including military security, scientific and cultural exchanges, trade and economic cooperation and human rights. Unfortunately, today, 9 years later, the adherence to these standards has not met our expectations. The Soviet Union and its satellites continue to disregard their commitments by largely ignoring the human rights provisions of this document. For example, the Soviet Union often jams Western radio broadcasts, restricts religious freedom, denies its citizens the right to emigrate and jails human rights activists.

Despite the failure of several signatory nations to adhere to these human rights standards, the principles of the Helsinki accords need to receive our full support. Let us call upon the President to reassert the United States' commitment to the Helsinki accords and to continue the effort to achieve full implementation of the human rights and humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki accords by raising the issue of noncompliance with authorities of the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries at every opportunity.
